The Honorable Robert F. Bennett
Ranking Minority Member
Committee on Rules and Administration
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510-4403

Dear Chairman Feinstein and Senator Bennett:

At the end of my nomination hearing, I was asked to provide a rebuttal to claims made in a letter sent to the Rules Committee dated June 11, 2007 ("the Letter"). The Authors of the Letter ("the Authors") sent a subsequent letter to the Rules Committee on June 18. I wish to note for the Committee that pursuant to Rule 1.6 of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct¹ and applicable rules of the states in which I am licensed to practice law, I am not able to reveal information regarding the contents of the legal advice I provided while employed at the Department of Justice due to attorney-client privilege. To the extent that the information requested has been revealed by the Department publicly or in response to Congressional oversight and inquiries, or otherwise waived, I will certainly provide that information.

With regard to the specific matters referenced in the Letter:

Hiring Practices and Personnel Matters

I did not make final decisions on who was hired in the Civil Rights Division or the Voting Section. Like other career employees, I was occasionally asked to interview candidates along with the Deputy Assistant Attorney General and/or the Section Chief. I provided my recommendations and observations on the candidate to the Deputy. Politics was not a part of the hiring process; no political litmus test existed, and no questions about any applicant's own political views were asked in any interview in which I participated.

¹ Model Rule 1.6, Confidentiality of Information (2007 version), is available on the American Bar Association's website, at http://www.abanet.org/cpr/mrpc/rule_1_6.html.
My own observation of the Deputies and the Assistant Attorney Generals for whom I worked is that they were interested in only one thing – hiring the best and brightest attorneys with demonstrated legal skills and abilities. Attorneys from a wide variety of educational backgrounds and professional experiences were always considered.

I refer the Committee to the written responses provided to the Senate Judiciary Committee by Assistant Attorney General Wan Kim, the last Assistant Attorney General for whom I worked before leaving the Division, following his oversight hearing on November 16, 2006. Mr. Kim stated that he was not aware of a change in the hiring process for lateral attorneys and that Section chiefs play a central role in the hiring of attorneys through both the Honors Program and lateral hiring process, including active participation in interviewing both lateral and Honors Program applicants. Mr. Kim added that he takes “very seriously the recommendations of Section Chiefs in all personnel matters.”

The Letter alleges that a large number of employees have left the Voting Section. Since I am no longer employed at the Division, I do not have access to personnel information. However, in the previously referenced responses, Assistant Attorney General Kim stated that the “average Division attorney attrition rate from FY 2001 through FY 2005 was between 12 and 13 percent.” The attrition rate during the previous Administration was virtually the same. Assistant Attorney General Kim added that “In FY 2005, the attrition rate was approximately 17 percent (16.6 percent for career attorneys), with 63 attorneys, 59 of whom were career attorneys, leaving the division that year.”

However, this rise in the attrition rate was apparently due to a special early retirement package that was offered to selected components within the Department of Justice by OPM, including the Civil Rights Division. A number of employees in the Division took advantage of this special program, including I believe, both Mr. Rich and Mr. Kengle. The Letter also states that a large number of attorneys have left the Voting Section since 2005. I have no information about that since I also left the Division in the first week of 2006.

The Letter discusses the alleged involuntary transfer of the Deputy Chief of the Voting Section. Although not identified by name, I assume the Authors are referring to Robert Berman. As I have stated, I had no hiring or firing authority within the Division, and no authority to transfer any employees. As I recall, Mr. Berman received approval from the Assistant Attorney General for his request to enter a special Department of Justice training program for the Senior Executive Service. Mr. Berman then requested a detail to the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts in September of 2005 as part of the qualification process for the SES. He was still on that detail when I left the Department of Justice and started at the Federal Election Commission. I have no knowledge regarding his subsequent transfer when he returned to the Voting Section or the reasons for that transfer since it occurred after I left the Division.

The Letter also falsely states that I engaged in “retribution” against certain employees. That is simply untrue, particularly since I had no authority to transfer or terminate the employment of any employee. The Authors complain that performance evaluations were changed to supposedly “retaliate” against employees for disagreeing with the legal conclusions of the Front Office. That is categorically untrue and there is no evidence that any information included in any evaluation was false. The standard form used to evaluate attorney performance requires approval by both a rating official and a reviewing official. In the Civil Rights Division, the rating official is typically the Section Chief who supervises the line attorneys. The reviewing official is usually one of the Deputy Assistant Attorney General's to whom the Section reports. I was tasked with looking at the evaluations forwarded by the Section Chief for review by the Deputy Assistant Attorney General and providing the Deputy Assistant Attorney General with my advice and opinion as to whether evaluations accurately reflected the performance of the employees that I had observed.

I reviewed evaluations for accuracy in rating the performance of the employee. For example, if an employee had written a legal memorandum that recited the wrong holding of an applicable legal case, or failed to discuss relevant case law, I might recommend that information be included in the performance evaluation. The vast majority of performance evaluations were ultimately approved with no changes; a small number that failed to include certain legal errors that had been made by the employee were brought to the attention of the Deputy Assistant Attorney General and the Chief of the Section. The Deputy Assistant Attorney General made the final decision on the content of the performance evaluation after discussions with the Section Chief. Under the rules governing career employees, they have the ability to appeal any part of their performance evaluations with which they disagree. I am unaware of any such appeals that were successful. I advised both the Section Chief and the Deputy Assistant Attorney General of instances in which material information regarding the legal performance of employees was not included in a performance evaluation. There was absolutely nothing improper in doing so – it was my job.

With regard to the issue of complaints filed with the Office of Professional Responsibility ("OPR"), I would respectfully refer the Committee to the letter of June 11, 2007, sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee by the Department of Justice that I understand provides information about these matters.

Redistricting and Section 5 Preclearance

1. Georgia's Voter Identification Statute

I answered extensively questions about the Division's review under Section 5 of a voter identification law submitted by the Georgia Attorney General during my nomination hearing. I would simply add that the Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General as the Acting Assistant Attorney General approved the recommendation made by the Chief of the Voting Section to preclear this statute without objection. I provided the Principal Deputy with my legal advice and recommendations on this case. Contrary to the Authors' claims, I was not required to recuse myself and I acted entirely in an ethical and professional manner when I was at the Division and published a law review article, in full compliance with 5 C.F.R. 2635.703(a) and 2635.807(b). In my article, I recommended very generally that voter identification requirements be adopted to improve the integrity of elections from a public policy standpoint. Most of the lawyers I worked with at the Division also had opinions on how certain laws could be improved or changed, and these opinions in no way interfered with their ability to enforce the requirements of the law. I have written extensively on public policy issues related to voting and elections. Writing on such issues does not pose a conflict of interest under any applicable rule of professional conduct and did not interfere with my ability to objectively review the application of Section 5 to a specific statute.

As a legal matter, the Authors are simply incorrect with respect to what constitutes a conflict of interest requiring recusal or disqualification. To borrow from a parallel situation, a judge is not required to recuse himself from a case simply because he has expressed views on the subject at issue. In fact, the Sixth Circuit specifically held that a judge was not required to recuse himself in an eminent domain case simply because he had previously written a law review article on the general subject. See Goodpasture v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 434 F.2d 760, 765 (6th Cir. 1970) ("We hold that District Judge William E. Miller did not err in failing to recuse himself because of a law review article written by him entitled 'Federal and State Condemnation Proceedings – Procedure and Statutory Background.'"). See also Laird v. Tatum, 409 U.S. 824, 831 (1972) (memorandum of Justice Rehnquist) ("My impression is that none of the former Justices of this Court since 1911 have followed a practice of disqualifying themselves in cases involving points of law with respect to which they had expressed an opinion or formulated policy prior to ascending to the bench."); Rosquist v. Soo Line R.R., 692 F.2d 1107 (7th Cir. 1982) ("Judge Grady had, in the past, written and spoken on the subject of contingent fees. He was not required, however, to recuse himself merely because he holds and has expressed certain views on that general subject."); U.S. v. Crowell, 586 F.2d 1020, 1027 (4th Cir. 1978) ("The fact that the district judge had researched the problems in advance and was able to make an immediate ruling does not establish prejudice."); Lawton v. Tarr, 327 F.Supp. 670, 673 (E.D.N.C. 1971) ("I do not believe that my strong aversion to the Vietnam War and my belief that it is the most tragic national mistake made in my lifetime will have the slightest effect or influence upon my judgment as to the time of termination of exposure under the selective service law. It is hornbook law that attitude or feeling a judge may entertain toward the subject matter of a case does not disqualify him.").

I would also note that Mr. Greenbaum, one of the Authors, was working for the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights at the time this statute was being reviewed by the Division, and his organization participated in bringing suit against the State of Georgia over the statute. Mr. Greenbaum’s name is on the Complaint that was filed in federal court in Georgia against the statute claiming that it violated various Constitutional provisions as well as the Voting Right Act.3

The Authors assert that the Division must have erred in approving this law because the "federal court in Georgia found that this law violated the poll tax provision of the Constitution." Even if a law violated the poll tax provision of the Constitution, that would have been completely irrelevant for Section 5 preclearance purposes. Under applicable Supreme Court precedent, the Division was not permitted in 2005 to consider constitutional violations (or violations of other provisions of the Voting Rights Act) when reviewing for preclearance a change in voting laws under Section 5 of the VRA. See Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, 520 U.S. 471 (1997). In fact, the Department of Justice published a Notice on January 18, 2001, providing guidance to the public on the retrogression standard under Section 5. See Guidance Concerning Redistricting and Retrogression Under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, 66 Fed.Reg. 5412. This Guidance specifically explained that under the Bossier Parish decision, "[r]edistricting plans that are not retrogressive in purpose or effect must be precleared, even if they violate other provisions of the Voting Rights Act or the Constitution." (emphasis added). The individual listed in the Guidance for anyone seeking further information was Joseph D. Rich, one of the Authors.

In Bossier Parish, the Supreme Court specifically stated that the Justice Department may only consider the retrogression standard of Section 5. Not only was the Department forbidden from considering possible constitutional violations when conducting a Section 5 review, it could not even consider possible violations of other provisions of the VRA, such as Section 2. In a second decision, Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, 528 U.S. 320 (2000), the Supreme Court held that Section 5 requires preclearance of a redistricting plan enacted with a discriminatory but nonretrogressive purpose. The court in the Georgia identification case, Common Cause/Georgia v. Billups, 406 F.Supp.2d 1326 (N.D. Ga. 2005), entered its preliminary injunction based solely on the 14th and 24th Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. The court specifically refused to grant an injunction under Section 2 of the VRA because the plaintiffs failed to demonstrate "a substantial likelihood of succeeding on the merits," i.e., it found an insufficient basis in the claim of racial discrimination. Id. at 1375. The court’s finding on the constitutional issues which did not involve racial discrimination were completely irrelevant and unrelated to the Division’s review and could not lawfully have served as the basis for a Department denial of preclearance under Section 5. To the extent that the Authors’ suggest otherwise, they would appear to be taking the position that the Department should have disregarded the Supreme Court’s decisions.

The Division’s Section 5 analysis was based on the information received in the submission from Georgia’s Attorney General, including four sets of data received from the state on driver’s licenses. As the Assistant Attorney General of the Office of Legislative Affairs, William Moschella, explained in a letter to Senator Christopher Bond dated October 7, 2005, the data received by the Division showed the following:

- Almost 6.5 million Georgians possessed identification from the Department of Motor Vehicles (“DMV”) acceptable under the state statute—more than the Census total projected voting age population of Georgia when ineligible individuals such as noncitizens and prisoners are subtracted.
- Thus, there were 2 million more issued state DMV identification cards then there were registered voters.
- The racial composition of the DMV data indicated that 28% were African American, a percentage slightly higher than the African-American percentage of the voting age population in Georgia.
- Information from the state university system, which issues identification cards to all students that are acceptable under the law, showed that the number of African-American students enrolled and thus possessing acceptable identification was slightly higher than the percentage of African-American students in the voting age population.
- Census data showed that about 14.3% of whites and 19.4% of African-American Georgians worked for governments at the local, state or federal level; therefore, a higher percentage of African-Americans than whites would have access to acceptable government-issued employee identification cards.

- Individuals who were unable to afford an identification card could receive one without paying a fee and the state had a mobile licensing program traveling to counties without licensing offices.
- No identification card was needed to vote by absentee ballot.

Mr. Moschella’s letter also cites other factors that were taken into account by the Division in making its decision. Applying the applicable retrogression standard under Section 5, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the Section Chief concluded that the State of Georgia had met its burden and that no objection was warranted.

The facts and the applicable law make it clear that the Division’s decision was entirely reasonable and well within the standards that applied to Section 5 reviews. The Georgia district court’s issuance of a preliminary injunction based on the plaintiffs’ ultimate likelihood of success on certain constitutional violations are not relevant to a Section 5 analysis under applicable Supreme Court precedent. While Congress subsequently rejected certain aspects of the Supreme Court’s Section 5 jurisprudence in 2006 when it renewed Section 5, the Division cannot be faulted for adhering to the law as it existed at the time.

2. Texas Redistricting Submission

I must point out as a general matter on the issue of redistricting, before discussing specifically the Texas redistricting submission, that while I was at the Division, the Voting Section reviewed literally hundreds of city, county, state and congressional redistricting plans drawn by both Republican and Democratic legislators and officials. Of course, hundreds of plans drawn by Democratic officials were precleared by the Division while I was there, without any objection by the Front Office. The Authors claim “partisanship” and “politics” played a role in the “unprecedented mid-decade” Texas redistricting submission and all other matters handled by the Division. If that is the case, however, why do the Authors not complain that the Division engaged in supposed “partisanship” in every other redistricting plan it reviewed? Obviously, the supposed “mis-handling” of the many redistricting plans submitted to the Division could have dramatically affected elections throughout the states covered under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. When considering only congressional redistricting plans, for example, the Division approved plans without objection drawn by Democratic legislatures in States such as Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and North Carolina. In my experience, the Assistant Attorney Generals for whom I worked and the Front Office of the Division applied the applicable law and precedent without regard to politics, partisanship or which political party might benefit from a particular redistricting plan.

4 Notably, other Federal courts have disagreed with the Georgia court when confronted with the question of the constitutionality of voter identification requirements. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals found no violation of any federal law or constitutional provisions when it reviewed a very similar photo identification law enacted in the State of Indiana. See Crawford v. Marion County Election Board, 472 F.3d 949 (7th Cir. 2007) petition for rehearing en banc denied 484 F.3d 436; see also Purcell v. Gonzalez, 549 U.S. ______ (2006) (Supreme Court vacated preliminary injunction issued by 9th Circuit against Arizona voter identification law).
I replied extensively at the hearing to questions raised over the Division’s review of the Texas redistricting plan under Section 5. The final decision on this matter was made by the Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General because Assistant Attorney General Acosta had recused himself from the matter. The Authors cite the subsequent Supreme Court decision as somehow indicative that the Division erred in preclearing the plan, implying that the real reason was political. That is simply not the case.

I provided my legal advice and recommendations to the senior leadership of the Division when the Chief of the Voting Section sent his memorandum on the Texas redistricting submission to the Front Office. The advice followed a very deliberate and careful review of every relevant fact, along with the governing legal standards under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. The preliminary internal legal memorandum that was leaked did not reflect the Division’s final analysis of the redistricting plan. The leaked memorandum contained several incorrect assessments. Most significantly, it asserted that Texas had eleven majority-minority congressional districts. As the subsequent courts decisions make perfectly clear, Texas had only eight majority-minority districts. This error was the basis for the staff recommendation to object to the redistricting plan.

Subsequent events, including two decisions by a three-judge panel finding no violation of the Voting Rights Act, the 2004 elections held under the new plan that resulted in the election of an additional African American legislator, Al Green, in the 9th District, and the Supreme Court’s decision, prove that the Division’s conclusion to preclear the redistricting plan was correct and the earlier recommendations made by staff attorneys in the leaked memorandum were flawed.

As noted above, the applicable standard under Section 5 was whether there would be retrogression (or backsliding) in the position of racial minorities in their effective exercise of the electoral franchise when compared to the existing or benchmark plan. See Beer v. United States, 425 U.S. 130 (1976); Reno v. Bossier Parish School Board, 520 U.S. 471 (1997) (The timing of the redistricting – even if it was an “unprecedented mid-decade redistricting plan” – is completely irrelevant to a Section 5 preclearance determination.) “Retrogression, by definition, requires a comparison of a jurisdiction’s new voting plan with its existing plan.” Reno, 520 U.S. at 478. The benchmark redistricting plan in Texas at the time the new plan was submitted for review to the Division was the plan that had been drawn by a three-judge federal panel in 2001 in Balderas v. Texas, Case No. 6:01-158, 2001 WL 35673968 (E.D. Tex. Nov. 14, 2001) (per curiam) summarily aff’d, 536 U.S. 9191 (2002). The three-judge panel in Balderas found that eight of the 32 congressional districts allocated to Texas were minority districts protected by the Voting Rights Act – six districts for Hispanic voters and two districts for African American voters. The congressional redistricting plan submitted by Texas to the Division in 2003, preserved, without question, eight minority districts - the sole requirement under Section 5. In fact, as the election of Congressman Al Green (TX-9) demonstrates, Texas actually created a third district in which African American voters could elect their candidate of choice. Far from being retrogressive, the plan that DOJ precleared was actually progressive under Section 5 with respect to minority voting rights.

After preclearance was granted, a group of plaintiffs filed suit under Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act alleging, inter alia, that Texas had not created enough minority voting districts. districts, i.e., that eight districts were not enough districts given demographics and other factors present in the state. Of course, Section 2 and Section 5 have different requirements and standards, and while Section 5 only requires preservation of the status quo, Section 2 involves a complex analysis under three factors set forth in Thornburg v. Gingles, 478 U.S. 30 (1986), as well as the "totality of circumstances," that in layman's terms prohibits not retrogression but dilution of minority voting strength.

However, even the plaintiffs' Section 2 claim that there were more than eight majority-minority districts in Texas was denied by a three-judge panel in 2004. Session v. Perry, 298 F.Supp.2d 451 (E.D.Tex. 2004). The court's denial of the claim under Section 2 lends support to the Division's decision under Section 5 to preclear the plan as non-retrogressive. Under established Supreme Court precedent, to obtain preclearance under the retrogression standard of Section 5, Texas was required to preserve the number of existing minority districts in the benchmark plan. As the court's Section 2 ruling confirmed, there were only eight protected minority districts in Texas. A second decision was issued by the same court in 2005 following remand from the Supreme Court, holding that there was no valid constitutional claim with respect to this redistricting plan. Henderson v. Perry, 399 F.Supp.2d 756 (E.D. Tex. 2005).

In 2006, the Supreme Court issued a 5-4 decision featuring opinions written by Chief Justice Roberts and Justices Kennedy, Stevens, Souter, Breyer and Scalia, holding that only one of the redistricting plan's newly formed Hispanic district was an insufficient substitute for another Hispanic district, and therefore violated Section 2 (not Section 5). That one district excepted, the rest of the redistricting plan was upheld. See League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) v. Perry, 126 S.Ct. 2594 (2006).

The Supreme Court's decision also lends support to the Division's Section 5 preclearance determination since it upheld the view that there were a total of eight protected minority districts in Texas, not eleven as was mistakenly asserted by staff attorneys in the leaked memorandum. In just one example of the mistakes made in the memorandum, it was claimed that there were four protected African-American districts in the benchmark plan, not two as had been determined in 2001 in the Balderas decision. The memorandum asserted that in addition to the two districts represented by African-American Congresswomen Sheila Jackson Lee and Bernice Johnson, districts 24 and 25, represented by Anglo Democrats Martin Frost and Chris Bell, were also protected minority districts because - supposedly - African-Americans in those districts were able to elect their candidates of choice (the key test for determining whether a district is a protected minority district).

The Supreme Court's Section 2 analysis considered whether Congressman Frost's district was a minority district and rejected that claim, affirming the lower court's decision that it was not a minority district. See LULAC v. Perry, 126 S.Ct. at 2624-2625 (citing testimony of Congresswoman Eddie Bernice Johnson that District 24 was drawn for an

5 The three-judge panel that first heard the lawsuit filed in response to Texas' 2003 redistricting plan described plaintiff's challenge as follows: "Plaintiffs allege that Plan 1374C is invalid because (1) Texas may not redistrict mid-decade; (2) the Plan unconstitutionally discriminates on the basis of race; (3) the Plan is an unconstitutional partisan gerrymander; and (4) various districts in Plan 1374C dilute the voting strength of minorities in violation of §2 of the Voting Rights Act." See Session v. Perry, 298 F.Supp.2d 451, 457 (E.D.Tex. 2004).
Anglo Democrat (Martin Frost, in particular) in 1991 by splitting a minority community and testimony of State Representative Ron Wilson that African-Americans did not have the ability to elect their preferred candidate, particularly an African-American candidate, in District 24. The leaked memorandum also asserts that district 25, represented by Chris Bell, was a protected minority district, which was simply untenable under the facts and the law. Bell had been elected in an open seat race in 2002 in which his African-American Democratic opponent who lost had received the majority of the African-American vote – Bell was thus obviously not the “candidate of choice” of African-American voters. Yet the memorandum mistakenly claimed that this was a protected minority district in which African-American voters could elect their candidate of choice. The staff’s “unanimous recommendation” was rejected not because of politics but because it was demonstrably wrong.

The Supreme Court did find that a new Hispanic District, number 25 under the new plan, was not a proper substitute for a Hispanic district established in the benchmark plan and represented by Henry Bonilla. The Court did not determine, however, that Texas must have seven Hispanic districts under Section 2 – as was claimed by the plaintiffs and in the leaked memorandum. Instead, the new district was considered not compact enough to substitute for the changes made in Congressman Bonilla’s district. The view of the Division that there were six Hispanic districts in the benchmark plan that must be preserved in the new redistricting plan in order for Section 5 preclearance to be granted, was correct.

Help America Vote Act

1. Guidance Letters

The Authors’ allegation that I “violated” decades-long traditions and policies against issuing advisory opinions by sending a series of letters to state officials on the requirements of the new Help America Vote Act (“HAVA”) is incorrect. President Bush signed HAVA into law on October 29, 2002. Title III of HAVA contained a series of new requirements for states in the areas of provisional balloting, computerized voter registration lists, voter identification requirements, and others. All of the states and territories covered by these new federal requirements needed to pass implementing legislation and regulations if their state laws did not match the new requirements of HAVA. The Division began receiving telephone calls, emails, and letters from state and local election officials and legislators all over the country making inquiries about this new federal law and what its provisions required. Unfortunately, the new Election Assistance Commission (“the EAC”) created by the statute was not yet in existence and did not start its operations until almost a year and a half later, and was not empowered by Congress to issue regulations, provide legal opinions, or enforce the statute.

The Division’s leadership was very concerned with ensuring that the states implemented the new requirements of the law as soon as possible and apparently felt that objective would be handicapped if no one in the federal government in Washington could answer the numerous questions that state and local officials had regarding implementation. The Division attempted to provide guidance to state and local officials on the requirements of the law based on how the Division intended to enforce it. To that end, the Division established a web page devoted to explaining HAVA’s requirements that provided answers.
to some of the most commonly asked questions, and where the Division could post its responses to specific inquiries. Contrary to the assertions made in the Letter, these were not “advisory opinions,” as the letters themselves are careful to state. For example, one of these letters reads:

The Attorney General has assigned to the Civil Rights Division the Department’s enforcement responsibilities under Section 401 of HAVA. Although the Department states its formal positions with respect to statutes it enforces only through case-by-case litigation, the Department does on occasion offer its general views on the manner in which it intends to enforce a particular statute or set of laws. Therefore, while we cannot issue a formal advisory opinion, we will attempt to answer the questions posed in your letter to the extent we can based on our responsibilities to enforce Title III of HAVA, which imposes uniform and nondiscriminatory election technology and administration requirements on the 55 States and Territories.

On January 18, 2001, the Voting Section published a document for the States and local jurisdictions covered by Section 5 that stated “it is appropriate to issue guidance concerning the review of redistricting plans submitted to the Attorney General for preclearance pursuant to Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act.” 66 Fed. Reg. 5412 (emphasis added).8 Another example of guidance provided by the Division was the “ADA Checklist for Polling Places,” released on February 20, 2004, which was intended to improve accessibility at polling places for disabled voters and available at http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/ada/votingck.htm.

The Authors’ assertions that there was something wrong with the Division trying to provide guidance to the States on how to implement these new federal requirements is simply wrong. A review of the guidance letters on the Voting Section’s webpage makes it clear that there is nothing improper about them, and that they are, in fact, rather unexceptional. The letters represent an attempt by the Division to carry out the intent of Congress in passing HAVA by helping the states come into compliance with a new federal statute that changed the way local jurisdictions administered federal elections. I think the Assistant Attorney General correctly decided to provide such guidance which not only helped states implement the law, but avoided forcing the Division having to file more enforcement actions under HAVA. The decision preserved Division resources. This was part of a comprehensive attempt to educate state and local officials on the requirements of HAVA that also included numerous presentations at meetings of election official.

9 Mr. Rich was Chief of the Voting Section when this guidance was issued. Another example of such information provided by the Division is “Guidance Regarding the Use of Race by Federal Law Enforcement Agencies,” issued in June 2003 and available on the Division’s web site.
organizations, such as the National Association of Secretaries of State, the National Association of State Election Directors, the National Association of County Officials, the Election Center, and state election official associations.

The letters attempt to explain the requirements of different provisions of Title III and are signed by various officials at the Division, including Mr. Rich and me. The vast majority of these letters were produced after consultation and discussion by the lawyers assigned to enforcement of HAVA on what was the legally correct response.

Two letters in particular have attracted attention. As I informed the Committee at my hearing, I drafted two letters sent to Arizona on provisional balloting requirements at the direction of my supervisors. As I recall, I may not have consulted with the Section prior to drafting the first letter. I believe, however, that I did consult with the Section on the second letter and incorporated suggested edits. (The second letter is available at http://www.azsos.gov/Releases/2005/pressrelease10/DOJ_Opinion_on_PROP200.pdf.) Mr. Rich has erroneously claimed that Sheldon Bradshaw, the Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General, could not have signed the letter of April 15, 2005, because he was no longer at the Division at the time. That is categorically untrue. Mr. Bradshaw can easily confirm that he was still at the Division on April 15 and that he both authorized and signed the letter in question.

The Authors raise in their letter a specific and similar guidance letter that I signed on September 8, 2003, in response to an inquiry from the Attorney General of Maryland. The Authors claim this letter “advocated for a policy keeping eligible citizens off the voter rolls for typos and other mistakes by election officials.” That claim is completely false. The letter speaks for itself and is available on the Voting Section’s web page at http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/hava/maryland_ltr.pdf. The letter carefully cites the applicable provisions of both the National Voter Registration Act and HAVA. First of all, it explains that under the NVRA, covered States must “ensure that any eligible applicant is registered to vote in an election” if the “valid voter registration form of the applicant” is submitted, accepted, received or postmarked, as the case may be, within 30 days before the federal election in question. Second, it cites to the new provisions in HAVA that require state election officials and state motor vehicle officials “to match information in the database of the statewide voter registration system with information in the database of the motor vehicle authority to the extent required to enable each such official to verify the accuracy of the information provided on applications for voter registration.” Section 303(a)(5)(B)(i) (emphasis added). Section 303(a)(5)(B)(ii) of HAVA also provides that state motor vehicle officials and the federal commissioner of Social Security shall “enter into an agreement...for the purpose of verifying applicable information” provided by voter registration applicants.

The September 8 letter makes it very clear that HAVA requires states to undertake the verification process outlined by Congress, but that the statute “leaves the ultimate decision of whether to register the applicant, including the decision of whether the information provided by the voter has been sufficiently verified, up to the State or local election official charged with that responsibility under State law.” Nowhere in the letter do I state that States should refuse to register applicants because of “typos and mistakes by election officials.”
2. The U.S. Election Assistance Commission

I am accused of “usurping” the role of Mr. Rich on the Board of Advisors of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission and failing to “consult” with him over EAC matters. Section 214 of HAVA provides that the Department of Justice has two representatives on the Board of Advisors, the Chief of the Office of Public Integrity and the Chief of the Voting Section or their “designees.” 42 U.S.C. § 15344. The Assistant Attorney General of the Division made the decision that I would serve as the designated representative on behalf of the Voting Section and sent a letter to the EAC notifying the Commission of that decision.

As outlined in Section 202 of HAVA, Congress intended the EAC to help improve the administration of federal elections. 42 U.S.C. § 15322. The Board of Advisors was tasked in Section 212 with providing its best advice and recommendations to the EAC in preparing voluntary voting system guidelines, voluntary guidance under Title III of HAVA, and best practices recommendations for election administration. Unlike Mr. Rich, I have real-world experience in election administration and considerable knowledge of voting system guidelines. I served as a member of two separate committees developing standards for voting equipment and electronic data interchange in the election area: the Voting Standards Committee of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers (IEEE) and the Election and Voter Service Technical Committee of the Organization for the Advancement of Structured Information Standards (OASIS). Due to my experience, the Assistant Attorney General apparently believed I was better suited to serve on the Board of Advisors.

The Authors also criticize certain email communications between me, the EAC Commissioners and the leadership of the Board of Advisors. There was nothing inappropriate about that correspondence. First, there is nothing unusual or untoward about discussions occurring between two federal agencies with overlapping jurisdiction over a federal statute, particularly when the two agencies may have differing views on the statute’s requirements. In fact, under such circumstances, one would hope that the agencies would consult with one another to reach consensus so the public and the regulated community are not faced with differing interpretations of the same statute. That is what in fact occurred on more than one occasion. Second, I was a member of the Board of Advisors that is supposed to give advice to the EAC Commissioners. I sent such advice and recommendations to the Commissioners and the Board on a number of issues – there was nothing inappropriate about that, either.

3. Amicus Briefs

The Authors accuse me of personally violating “established Department policy” by supposedly involving the Division in “contentious and partisan litigation” and for allegedly “draft[ing] legal briefs in lawsuits between the Republican and Democratic parties...all in favor of the Republican party’s position.” Though the Authors do not provide details, these accusations apparently refer to litigation filed in 2004 by private plaintiffs under HAVA over the new statute’s provisional balloting requirements.

Amicus briefs are prepared by the Appellate Section and then reviewed by the senior leadership of the Division for final approval. No brief can be filed without the Assistant Attorney General’s authorization. A simple review of the briefs reveals the names of the attorneys at the Division who prepared and approved these briefs on behalf of the Department of Justice – they included Assistant Attorney General R. Alexander Acosta and the head of the Appellate Section, David K. Flynn, along with the lawyers in the Section who drafted the briefs, David White and Chris Wang. My name appears nowhere in the briefs, although I reviewed drafts prepared by Mr. Flynn and his Appellate Section lawyers, as did other lawyers in the Front Office of the Division. Decisions regarding the contents of these briefs, and whether to file them, were made by the Assistant Attorney General and the Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General. This is entirely consistent with the law, regulations, and the usual and customary practices of the Division. The Authors vastly overstate my influence.

The cases in which these amicus briefs were filed in Florida, Michigan, and Ohio (including the Sixth Circuit) were the first major cases under HAVA. Each raised significant issues about the availability of a private right of action and the Section 302 requirement that states provide provisional ballots to certain voters. 42 U.S.C. §15482. The briefs at issue are available on the HAVA web page of the Voting Section at the Division’s website at http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/hava/hava.html.

Section 401 of HAVA gives the Attorney General authority to enforce the statute, so it should come as no surprise that the Assistant Attorney General believed it was important to provide the courts with the Department’s views on the issues raised in the lawsuits. In fact, the Division files amicus briefs in a wide variety of cases that affect voting rights. The gravaman of the Authors’ complaint is really that they disagree with the Division’s position that HAVA did not permit a private right of action with respect to the statute’s provisional balloting section. Once again, their criticism is policy-driven and they characterize these differences in policy as malfeasance. The briefs speak for themselves and in my opinion present a reasoned argument based on the text and structure of the statute, as well as its legislative history. In these briefs, the Department noted that other voting rights statutes, namely the Voting Rights Act and the National Voter Registration Act, clearly recognize a private right of action, while HAVA does not. This issue was even debated by members of Congress and Senator Dodd, one of HAVA’s main sponsors, indicated that HAVA was not privately enforceable. Senator Dodd stated:

While I would have preferred that we extend [a] private right of action..., the House simply would not entertain such an enforcement provision. Nor would they accept federal judicial review of any adverse decision by a State administrative body.

The Sixth Circuit ultimately disagreed with the Department’s position and held that although “HAVA does not create a private right of action,” HAVA does create a right to cast a provisional ballot under certain circumstances that is enforceable against state officials under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.9 While the Authors’ preferred policy position may have prevailed on this issue, they are absolutely incorrect that the Division came to its position as a result of political considerations or that that position was unreasonable.

With respect to the second issue raised in these cases, provisional ballots, the Authors fail to inform the Rules Committee that in each of these three cases, the Division’s position prevailed. The Florida federal district court and the Sixth Circuit (which decided both the Ohio and Michigan cases) agreed with the Division’s position on provisional balloting. See Florida Democratic Party v. Hood, 342 F.Supp.2d 1073 (N.D. Fla.2004); Sandusky County Democratic Party v. Blackwell, 386 F.3d815 (6th Cir. 2004) and 387 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 2004).

The issue in each of these cases was whether Section 302 of HAVA requires states to count the provisional ballots of individuals who voted outside of their assigned precincts. The Division’s amicus briefs addressed only the very narrow federal question — they did not address whether or not precinct-based voting is appropriate in any particular state. The Division’s briefs argued that HAVA requires a state to provide a provisional ballot to an individual who does not appear on the registration list at a polling place, but believes he or she is registered and eligible to vote there. However, Congress did not prohibit a state from declining to count that ballot if the voter is not, in fact, eligible to vote at that polling place. The Sixth Circuit rejected the arguments advanced by the plaintiffs, and held that Congress did not intend to override traditional precinct-based voting by the states when it passed HAVA and that HAVA does not require a state to count a provisional ballot “if it is cast outside the precinct in which the voter resides.” Thus, every final court of record in each of these cases agreed with the Division’s position on provisional ballots.

The Authors also fault me for drafting a letter in another Ohio case, Spencer v. Blackwell. This letter was authorized and signed by the Assistant Attorney General and is available on the Voting Section’s HAVA web page at http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/hava/spencerr.pdf and speaks for itself. It brought to the federal court’s attention the new provisional balloting requirements set forth in HAVA and noted that if voters were challenged in the November 2 election pursuant to state law, “as a matter of federal law those challenged voters must be given the opportunity to cast a provisional ballot even if they are unable to answer the specific questions posed by election judges.” See Letter of October 29, 2004, from R. Alexander Acosta to Judge Susan J. Diott. The Authors claim that the Division’s letter was somehow improper because “the law did not implicate any statute that the Department enforces.” The state challenge law at issue, the Division noted, implicated HAVA’s provisional balloting requirements. There was absolutely nothing improper about the Assistant Attorney General’s decision to provide information to the judge in this case on the Division’s views about a new federal statute. The Sixth Circuit found against the plaintiffs in their request for injunctive relief. Spencer v. Blackwell, 388 F.3d 547 (6th Cir. 2004).

National Voter Registration Act

The Authors accuse me of “chang[ing] the enforcement direction of the Department regarding the National Voter Registration Act.” This complaint amounts to nothing more than the fact that the Division enforced Section 8 of the NVRA. Among its other requirements, Section 8 requires states to “conduct a general program that makes a reasonable effort to remove the names of ineligible voters from the official lists of eligible voters.”
voters by reason of (A) the death of the registrant; or (B) a change in the residence of the registrant." 42 U.S.C. § 1973gg(a)(4). Section 8 is an important part of the nation’s voter rights laws, and the low esteem in which the Authors hold it is perplexing.

First, the Authors vastly overstate my authority. The enforcement priorities of each Section at the Division, including the Voting Section, are determined by the Assistant Attorney General, not a career Counsel. I certainly made recommendations to the senior leadership on what those priorities should be – that was part of my job - but I had no final decision making authority.

Second, under the current Administration, the Division has an outstanding NVRA enforcement record. The prior Administration did not file a single lawsuit to enforce the NVRA during the period 1997 to 2000. The first new lawsuits to enforce the statute were filed in 2001 against the State of Tennessee and the City of St. Louis, Missouri. Suit was filed against Tennessee over the state’s failure to implement voter registration opportunities in state public assistance and driver’s licenses offices. Suit was filed against St. Louis because of the city’s failure to follow the specific notice provisions of Section 8 of the NVRA before removing voters from the registration list.

The Division also filed NVRA suits against New York for failing to offer voter registration to disabled students at public colleges and universities and against Pulaski County, Arkansas for violating a number of provisions of Section 8. The Division additionally settled two other NVRA problems out of court that involved jurisdictions not properly registering new voters.

The Authors complain specifically about a lawsuit filed against Missouri for the state’s failure to properly maintain voter registration lists as required under Section 8, as well as improperly removing voters by failing to follow the required notice provisions. This enforcement action was the result of an investigation conducted by career lawyers within the Voting Section (as described in the complaint) that showed that the Secretary of State and certain Missouri counties were not complying with the law. The suit had absolutely nothing to do with politics or partisanship or the fact that the Missouri Secretary of State is a Democrat – in fact, the Division filed an almost identical suit under the NVRA for the same failure to properly maintain the voter registration list against the Indiana Secretary of State, who happened to be a Republican. The Authors criticize the filing of the Missouri suit because a federal judge dismissed the case, holding that DOJ needs to sue the individual counties at fault. However, it is my understanding that the dismissal is being appealed by the Division.

In the identical Indiana NVRA suit, the Secretary of State agreed to remedy the violation and entered into a Consent Decree that was approved by a federal judge. See

10 The complaint is available at http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/nvra/mo_nvra_comp.htm. Paragraph 13 of the complaint states, in part, that there are local election jurisdictions that "have not always followed the notice and timing requirements of Section 8 of the NVRA with respect to voters who may have moved. These practices have resulted in the removal of voters from voter registration lists in elections for federal office prematurely in a manner not consistent with federal law."

11 See http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/nvra/in_nvra_comp.htm. The Indiana case was filed in 2006 when I was no longer at the Division, although the investigation that led to the suit was authorized by the Acting Assistant Attorney General while I was still at the Division.
http://www.usdoj.gov/crt/voting/nvra/in_nvra_cd.pdf. The same is true of the NVRA lawsuit in New Jersey mentioned by the Authors – the defendants entered into a Consent Decree approved by a federal court.\textsuperscript{12}

The Authors criticize these three NVRA lawsuits, two of which were settled with the explicit approval of federal judges and one of which is on appeal. They fail to acknowledge that these three lawsuits were not the only NVRA lawsuits brought by the Division. Their disagreement is nothing more than a public policy dispute. They would have ordered the Division’s enforcement priorities differently than did the leadership of the Division and the Department of Justice. The Division could not willfully ignore the list maintenance requirements of the NVRA, requirements that were reinforced by Congress in Section 303 of HAVA. List maintenance is required in both the NVRA and HAVA and it is the responsibility of DOJ to enforce those laws.

\textit{Georgia v. Ashcroft}

Finally, the Authors claim that I failed to understand “that [my] role as a Department of Justice attorney was to represent the ‘United States of America.’” Instead, on several occasions [1] took actions indicating a stubborn view that the Department represented the Bush Administration, the Republican Party or the Assistant Attorney General.” I agree that a DOJ lawyer represents the United States, and I also believe that the Executive Branch should be run by the appointees of the President of the United States.

The President’s appointees are vested with decision-making authority. During my time at the Department of Justice, I represented the United States, but I also represented the Bush Administration – which appointed my superiors, including the Assistant Attorney General to whom I reported. Every federal employee in the Executive Branch represents both his country and whichever Administration happens to occupy the White House. (The suggestion that I neglected my duties as a Department employee to instead serve as a Republican Party operative while I worked at the Division is insulting.) I do not believe that any “career professional” (myself included) has the right to disobey, or otherwise disregard, a politically-appointed superior simply because he disagrees with that superior’s policy choices and believes that he “represents the United States.”

The final allegation the Authors bring to the Committee’s attention is that I “took a leading role” in the \textit{Georgia v. Ashcroft} case and somehow violated the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure by attending an oral hearing held in this case when it was on remand before the district court. One of my duties as a career Counsel in the Front Office of the Division was monitoring all litigation in which the Voting Section was involved and reporting developments to my supervisors, including the Deputy Assistant Attorney General and the Assistant Attorney General. I did not take an active role in the litigation itself, such as taking depositions, interviewing witnesses, signing pleadings, or presenting oral arguments to the judges, as the trial attorneys assigned to the case were, although I certainly reviewed the work done in the case. I was under no obligation to file a Notice of Appearance under the applicable federal rules and I certainly was not required to do so simply because I attended an oral hearing (as did other Voting Section career lawyers whose names were not on the pleadings filed with the court). I made no presentations of any kind to the judges in the matter and did not in any other way put in an appearance in the case.

Conclusion

I have been a lawyer for over two decades. I have always practiced law in a professional and completely ethical manner, and that includes the four years I worked at the Department of Justice. Partisanship and politics played no part in the decisions I made or the legal advice and recommendations that I gave to my supervisors at the Civil Rights Division, including all three of the Assistant Attorney Generals for whom I worked. I applied the law and prior precedent as I understood it to every case I was presented. I believe the facts and the subsequent court decisions show that the decisions the Division made while I worked there were reasonable, easily defensible, and legally correct, contrary to the claims made by the Authors.

The FEC can only function well when its commissioners engage in bipartisan consensus building to issue regulations, conduct audits, and enforce the law when conducting investigations of violations. The record that the four nominees have established over the past 18 months while they have served on the Commission demonstrates our ability to work together to enforce the Federal Election Campaign Act.

Enforcement

In enforcement matters, for example, we have cast 1,094 votes. Votes on enforcement matters are a true test of the ability of Commissioners to work together on a nonpartisan basis, because these are votes that determine whether or not the Commissioners believe that a political candidate or political party or political committee have violated the law based on the investigation conducted by the FEC’s Office of General Counsel. In 2006, the percentage of split votes was only 0.9%, and in 2007, it was only 0.2% through June 5. This is a remarkable achievement that shows that the Commissioners of both parties are intent on enforcing the law without regard to partisan advantage.

Advisory Opinions

The current Commission has voted on 42 Advisory Opinions. See Attachment A. Twenty-three of these opinions were adopted unanimously. Nine were adopted with only one dissenting vote. In three cases, the Commission split and was unable to approve a response to the requestor. Of the 39 cases in which the Commission issued an Opinion, I have cast only five dissenting votes. The record shows that every current Commissioner has dissented more than once during this period. There is a healthy diversity of opinion among the Commissioners which is invaluable when considering the issues that come before us. Overall, I think this record demonstrates a remarkable ability on the part of each Commissioner to work with his colleagues to reach agreement on difficult issues.
Regulations

Since I was appointed to this position, the Commission has adopted seven (7) new Final Rules, and I voted as part of a bipartisan majority in each of those instances. The Commission also voted twice to retain existing rules. I dissented in one of those matters because I believed the Commission should undertake a rulemaking to produce additional regulations to provide guidance to the regulated community on the subject of when a 527 organization becomes a federally regulated "political committee."\(^{13}\) The Commission's rulemakings are detailed at Attachment B.

I am proud of my record at the Commission because it shows in concrete terms that I work together with my fellow Commissioners every day to achieve our common goals and objectives. This record also refutes any suggestion that I am unable or unwilling to enforce the law as it is written. I thank the Committee for this opportunity to respond to the criticisms that have been leveled against me.

Sincerely yours,

Hans A. von Spakovsky

The Honorable Robert Bennett
Ranking Member
United States Senate
Rules and Administration
305 Russell Senate Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairwoman Feinstein and Ranking Member Bennett:

Members of the Georgia Delegation strongly support Senate confirmation of Commissioner Hans A. von Spakovsky to a full term on the Federal Election Commission.

The right to vote has rightly been called the "crown jewel" of all our civil rights. Without adequate protections for the right to vote and full disclosure of the interests involved, our democratic system would quickly disintegrate into a rule of the few. Through his years of public service, Commissioner von Spakovsky has demonstrated his commitment to this sacred right, and upholding the laws related to its protection.

For over twenty years, Hans has dedicated himself to both private and public service. In private practice he has represented clients on corporate, legislative, and regulatory matters before county commissions, state agencies, and the Georgia General Assembly. Hans also served as the Executive Director of the Voting Integrity Project Legislative Alliance, a nonpartisan organization that focused on encouraging accessibility, accountability, and oversight of our election system. In addition, he served on the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections, which supervises elections in the City of Atlanta and the largest county in Georgia. Due to his expertise, he was invited to testify before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee on May 9, 2001, as well before the Senate Rules Committee itself in a field hearing in Atlanta on "Federal Election Reform" on July 23, 2001.

Before being nominated to the Federal Election Commission, Hans served our nation for more than four years at the Department of Justice. As a trial attorney for the Voting Reform Initiative in the Department, Hans provided valuable advice during the creation of the Help America Vote Act (P.L. 107-252). As you are aware, this important bill was the central response to the voting problems of the 2000 election. As part of a large overhaul of our nation's election system, HAVA created the Election Assistance Commission to serve as a clearinghouse for election administration information, provided funds to states to improve election administration and replace outdated voting systems, and created minimum standards for states to follow in several key areas of election administration.

After playing a vital role to ensure fairness in our election system, Hans took a position at the DOJ’s Civil Rights Division as the Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General. In that capacity he oversaw the Voting Section and provided legal analysis and policy recommendations on the complex issues surrounding the interaction of civil rights issues with elections, redistricting, and voting. While he was at DOJ, Hans served as a member of the first Board of Advisors of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission, as well as the Voting Standards Committee of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers and the Election and Voter Service Technical Committee of the Organization for the Advancement of Structured Information Standards.

Hans manifests a rare trait in Washington—he is willing to take a stand based on his understanding of the law without concern for the politics of a situation. In a city driven by politics, his service is a beacon to all of us as to how we are to serve our constituents.

Commissioner von Spakovsky’s dedication, understanding, and sense of professionalism when approaching laws related to protecting our most important right is unsurpassed. It is without reservation that we fully support the confirmation of Hans A. von Spakovsky to a full term and ask for your favorable consideration.

Sincerely,

Re: Nomination of Hans von Spakovsky to the Federal Elections Commission

Dear Chairman Feinstein and Senator Bennett:

I am writing to you to express my enthusiastic support for the nomination of Hans von Spakovsky as a Commissioner on the Federal Elections Commission. As you know, Mr. von Spakovsky has been serving as a recess appointee on the FEC, during which time he has demonstrated superb judgment and has exhibited a high level of energy that brings credit to that body. In fact, I was recently elected as the Chairman of the Georgia State Ethics Commission, the entity in Georgia that regulates political giving and expenditures as well as lobbyist activity, and I frequently consult with Mr. von Spakovsky regarding the similarities and differences between the federal election laws and the Georgia Ethics and Government Act, which my Commission administers. He has been unfailingly generous of his time and experience in these matters.

In addition, I have had the good fortune to know Mr. von Spakovsky for years, both when he was an attorney in Atlanta and a colleague at the Department of Justice in...

Washington, D.C. In Atlanta, Mr. von Spakovsky and I were both concerned with actual and potential voter fraud and intimidation (regardless of the party that was affected) and participated in a variety of activities to help ensure that all Georgians who are legally entitled to vote were able to vote without fear of intimidation or having their vote diluted. Further, Mr. von Spakovsky and I both served as counsel to the late Senator Coverdell’s state political action committee, the “Good Government for Georgia Committee,” which continues to this day to provide leadership training through the Coverdell Leadership Institute to individuals who may one day decide to enter public service or run for office. This is an extremely valuable organization in the state and has served to engage many young professionals in the political process.

Mr. von Spakovsky and I were also able to serve together in the Department of Justice. I served as the Senior Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division and then as Senior Counsel to the Associate Attorney General at the Department from 2001 through the end of 2003. Mr. von Spakovsky served as the Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division. We had the opportunity to work on a variety of matters together, and what always impressed me was Hans’s strong work ethic and his commitment to the mission of Civil Rights Division and the Department of Justice.

Hans is also a dedicated husband and loving father. He has made and will continue to make an excellent public servant. I hope that the Committee will favorably consider him as a permanent appointee.

Thank you very much for your consideration.

Sincerely yours,

William H. Jordan

Reference – Confirmation of Hans A. von Spakovsky to Federal Election Commission

Dear Senator Bennett,

I am requesting that you approve the confirmation of Hans von Spakovsky, currently a Commissioner of the FEC. In my current position of Chairman of the Forsyth County Georgia Board of Elections, I have known Mr. von Spakovsky for more than 10 years.

During that time, we have interfaced on numerous issues with regard to elections and the legal issues related to the implementation of the Help America Vote Act. He has been a highly regarded speaker at various national election meetings that I have attended as well as at our own Georgia Election Officials Association. His experience and insight has helped all of us deal with the complexities of HAVA as well as the related Voting Rights Act of 1965.

I think my own background as an election official in Georgia, a member of the National Committee to Review the 2004 Election and testifying before the House Administration Committee on election related issues gives me some insight into what we need as members of the FEC. Hans von Spakovsky has a unique set of experiences that will help all election officials of any party or race.

Thank you for the consideration.

Sincerely yours,

Gary J. Smith

Dear Madam Chairman:

This is in reference to Mr. Hans A. von Spakovsky whose nomination as Commissioner to the Federal Election Commission is pending before the Senate Rules Committee. In an official capacity Mr. von Spakovsky and I worked together on joint Department of Defense (DoD) and Department of Justice (DOJ) initiatives when he was the DOJ Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights. This working relationship produced successful results as we asked the states for their cooperation in ensuring that uniformed service members, their family members, and overseas citizens would have a full opportunity to vote in the 2004 elections.

The Secretary of Defense is responsible for administering the federal responsibilities of the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act. The Act protects the voting rights of all active duty uniformed services members, the Merchant Marine, the eligible family members of the foregoing, the Commissioned Corps of the Public Health Service and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and all U.S. citizens residing outside the U.S. As the Director, Federal Voting Assistance Program, I administer the provisions of the Act on behalf of the Secretary of Defense. The DOJ Civil Rights Division is charged with enforcing the Act.

In the 2004 election year, Mr. von Spakovsky and his staff worked closely with my office as we wrote joint letters from our Departments to all state chief election officials about recommendations for improvements to the absentee voting process. The letters recounted how closely the Departments worked with many state and local election officials to eliminate absentee ballot transit problems and delays exacerbated by uncertain mail delivery in many parts of the world. The Departments continued to support and encourage state-sponsored initiatives to allow at least 45-day ballot transit time, use expedited postal or courier methods to deliver ballots to voters, use back-up or special write-in absentee ballots, and seek legislative or regulatory authorization to permit voters covered under the Act to apply for, receive and return absentee ballots by facsimile or electronic mail methods in addition to traditional mail delivery.

Many states adopted these recommendations. The adoption of instantaneous methods of transmittal such as faxing and email, with appropriate safeguards to protect the integrity and security of ballots, ensured that absentee voters were not disenfranchised due to mail delays, especially in remote or combat areas. In the 2004 general election the voting participation rates among uniformed service members and overseas citizens were the highest in the history of the Federal Voting Assistance Program. Enfranchising these citizens is a shared concern of the Departments and state and local government officials. Mr. von Spakovsky was resourceful, conscientious and tireless in his efforts to ensure that all citizens covered by the Act had an equal opportunity to register and vote absentee.

Sincerely,

Dear Madam

Hans Von Spakovsky
FEC Commissioner Nomination

I am writing to support the nomination of Hans Von Spakovsky as a Commissioner to the Federal Election Commission. I am the chair of the OASIS' Election & Voter Services Technical Committee and worked with Hans on this committee for a number of years. During the time I worked with Hans, he was at the Department of Justice and I was the Director of Technology in the UK Government's Cabinet Office with responsibilities for their e-government and e-voting programmes. I have since taken early retirement but continue to chair the committee.

During the time that Hans participated in the committee I found him to be a man of great integrity and honesty, and he displayed great patience in expressing the needs of the USA in the lengthy development of our global e-voting standard. He clearly has a great knowledge of the USA's voting rules, practices and legislation and was able to present them to the committee in a concise and understandable manner. He was also able to recognise that different parts of the world have different practices and used his intellect and experience to help us reach a compromise that was acceptable to all but one that did not undermine the USA's needs.

In my opinion Hans is someone who would be an asset to the FEC and I have no hesitation in supporting him for the post of Commissioner.

Yours Sincerely

Dear Senator Bennett:

I know that you have before the Senate Rules Committee the nomination of Hans A. von Spakovsky to be a Commissioner of the Federal Elections Commission. In my capacity as Kentucky's Secretary of State and chief elections official, I worked closely with Mr. von Spakovsky during his tenure with the U.S. Department of Justice.

I was elected in 2003 and took office in January 2004 just as the implementation of the Help America Vote Act (HAVA) was beginning. At the time, the Kentucky State Board of Elections, which I chair, was very concerned about the 2004 and 2006 deadlines for HAVA implementation. We worried that we might have trouble meeting the deadlines because of the delays in the formation of the EAC and the fact that HAVA had not been fully funded. Also, there were many questions about some of the mandates, such as provisional balloting.

As a result, the Board often sought guidance from the Department of Justice and specifically, Mr. von Spakovsky, about how to proceed. At each and every opportunity, Mr. von Spakovsky was reassuring, helpful and fair. Moreover, he clearly possessed a passion for, and keen knowledge of, election laws and administration. Through my involvement with the National Association of Secretaries of State, I know that this was the experience of many of my colleagues. That's why I was excited to hear that he had been nominated for the FEC. I believe he will be an excellent Commissioner and urge you to give him strong consideration.

Thank you for taking the time to read my letter. I hope that you find my observations helpful in your confirmation process. Please contact me if you have any questions about this letter or my experiences with Mr. von Spakovsky.

It is with great confidence that I offer my support of Hans A. von Spakovsky as a commissioner on the Federal Election Commission. I have had the distinct pleasure of working with Mr. von Spakovsky on various occasions, one of which included the Election Assistance Commission Board of Advisors. Without a doubt, he was one of the most reliable and reasonable persons with whom I have had the privilege of working while I chaired the Board.

Mr. von Spakovsky’s strong moral work ethic and invaluable insights have proven to be a tremendous asset to the many programs and departments with which he has been involved.

I am certain Mr. von Spakovsky would continue to serve this commission with the utmost integrity and grace that he demonstrates on a daily basis. Therefore, I believe his record merits the highest recommendation possible and that he deserves your approval.

Dear Senator Feinstein,

I am pleased to offer this recommendation in support of Mr. Hans A. von Spakovsky to serve as Commissioner for the Federal Election Commission. I have worked with Mr. Spakovsky professionally for several years and know him to be an excellent advisor to election officials and a devoted public servant.

Mr. Spakovsky has worked closely with state and local election officials to explain and encourage compliance with the requirements of federal laws like HAVA and NVRA. His expertise was an invaluable asset for officials across the country, and Hans always made a significant effort to personally reach as many of us on the state and local level as possible.

Hans spoke numerous times to meetings of the National Association of Secretaries of State on several topics, and his insight was always well received. In addition to these presentations, Hans went above and beyond what was required of him by making himself available to election officials by both email and telephone.

I have no doubt that he will be excellent addition to the Federal Election Commission, and I ask that you give him the utmost consideration. If I can be of further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me at 317.232.6536.

Re: Hans A. von Spakovsky

Dear Senator Bennett:

I am writing to support the nomination of Hans A. von Spakovsky to be a Commissioner of the Federal Election Commission. Although I am not writing in my official capacity, I am chairman of the board of directors of the Legal Services Corporation, having been nominated by President George W. Bush and confirmed by the Senate in 2003.

I met Hans in the mid-1990s when he was selected to participate in the Coverdell Leadership Institute (CLI), founded by our late U.S. Senator Paul D. Coverdell. It has been my privilege to serve as a director and officer of CLI since its inception. Hans was an outstanding participant in the CLI program and later became counsel to Senator Coverdell’s political action committee.

Hans has been active in the political process and in his community. He served as an officer and member of the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections; Chairman of the Fulton County Republican Party; President of the Sandy Springs Civic Roundtable; and trustee of the Sandy Springs Historic Community Foundation. He has served on the board of advisors of the Georgia Public Policy Foundation as well as the national advisory board of the Voter Integrity Project.

Hans has had a variety of legal experience, including private practice, corporate practice and important duties in the Civil Rights Division at the Justice Department. He also has considerable public policy experience.

Finally, Hans is currently serving with distinction as an FEC Commissioner under a recess appointment. He knows his job and performs it with great competence and professionalism. During his career, he has achieved significant positive changes in the area of election law at the community, local, state and national level. Without question, he has the qualifications and experience to continue to serve as an outstanding Commissioner.
I recommend Hans von Spakovsky without hesitation and urge your favorable consideration of his nomination.

Please let me know if you need additional information.

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Re: Nomination of Hans A. von Spakovsky to the Federal Election Commission

Dear Chairman Feinstein and Senator Bennett:

It is my honor and privilege to recommend Hans A. von Spakovsky to you for confirmation to the Federal Election Commission as a Commissioner.

I have served on the Fulton County Board of Commissioners for over 32 years and have known Mr. von Spakovsky for the last 20 years through his involvement in Fulton County. Before he moved to Washington, D.C. to take a job at the Department of Justice, Mr. von Spakovsky was one of the most active members of his community here in Atlanta. He was a member of numerous civic and community organizations, including the Boards of the Sandy Springs Historic Community Foundation, the Sandy Springs Civic Roundtable, Leadership Sandy Springs, and Sandy Springs Revitalization, and helped found his neighborhood's residential association.

Our county government, which is the largest county government in Georgia, also has a number of advisory and other boards that are essential to providing county commissioners with advice and counsel on governance. Mr. von Spakovsky served on three different county boards and did so with integrity and initiative. From 1997 to 1999, he served on the Fulton County Department of Parks and Recreation Advisory Board. From 1996 to 2001, he served on the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections, ending his final year in 2001 as the Vice Chairman of the Commission. Due to his outstanding work on these two Boards, I also nominated him in August of 2001 to serve on the Fulton County Public-Private Housing Initiative Board. His appointment was unanimously approved by the Fulton County Board of Commissioners, a bipartisan board of Republicans and Democrats.

On all of these Boards, Mr. von Spakovsky exhibited strong leadership and showed a dedication to helping the citizens of Fulton County that was keenly appreciated. In his work on the bipartisan Registration and Election Board, he helped oversee the registration of hundreds of thousands of Fulton County voters, as well as the administration of over 300 precincts on Election Day. Our elections ran smoothly, efficiently and fairly because of the work done by Mr. von Spakovsky and his fellow commissioners. Due to his extensive work for Fulton County, the Board of Commissioners unanimously adopted a resolution before he moved to Washington thanking him for his service.

I strongly recommend that you confirm Hans von Spakovsky as a Commissioner on the Federal Election Commission. In addition to his demonstrated expertise and experience in the elections process, he is a man of integrity, initiative, and common sense. His work on various Fulton County Boards demonstrated his diplomatic skills and ability to work with members of both political parties to get the job done. He will be a positive addition to the Federal Election Commission and will work to uphold and administer our campaign laws.

Respectfully,

Tom Lowe

Re: Letter of Recommendation – Hans von Spakovsky

Dear Senator Feinstein:

It is my pleasure and my privilege to commend Commissioner Hans von Spakovsky to you for confirmation as a Commissioner with the Federal Election Commission. My recommendation is based on three essential personal qualities I believe Hans possesses in equal parts: Intelligence, Integrity, and Initiative. Please allow me to expound.

I first met Commissioner von Spakovsky when he was the United States Department of Justice’s designated representative to the Board of Advisors of the United States Election Assistance Commission (EAC). At the time, he was assigned as the lead attorney for the Voting Section of the Civil Rights Division.

During our board meetings, Commissioner von Spakovsky displayed a keen grasp of the complexities associated with enforcement of our nation’s election laws, especially with respect to the Help America Vote Act and the National Voter Registration Act. He always cautioned the board to not overstep its mission of providing advice to the Commissioners that would be in concert with Congress’s expressed intent as set forth in HAVA. When passions flared, it was Hans who in quite, articulate, fashion encouraged the members to disagree agreeably and come back to the main point of discussion. In short, he was able to articulate -- with reasoned intellect -- positions that ensured that the Board advanced the causes underlying basis for the Help America Vote Act.

Moreover, throughout these board meetings, I watched as then-DOJ attorney Hans von Spakovsky carefully avoided participating in discussion that would conflict with his role as chief enforcement officer for the DOJ Civil Rights Division. It was apparent to all that he cherished his solemn duty to refrain from bias and prejudice in order to avoid the appearance of impropriety. He did not try to influence policy decisions that he would then be tasked with enforcing. One would expect an attorney who is governed by the legal profession’s rules of ethical conduct to exhibit these qualities. But in him we sensed it was because of who he is, not because of some imposed requirement of his profession. Commissioner von Spakovsky has operated at the highest levels of our government’s chief enforcement office to ensure the preservation of the sacred right of all United States citizens, the Right to Vote. And he has done so with an extra measure of integrity.
Finally, Commissioner von Spakovsky has displayed great initiative throughout his distinguished career. He started out as a practicing attorney who saw the election process as essential to the preservation of our nation. He became involved as a volunteer poll worker and poll watcher and eventually became a local election commissioner in Fulton County (Atlanta) Georgia. As an attorney, he held his election commission to a higher standard of conduct ensuring compliance with all state and federal election laws. Hans went on to work with Georgia state government and subsequently moved to the District of Columbia to work with the Department of Justice first in the DOJ’s Voting Reform Initiative, then with the Civil Rights Division. It takes great initiative to move outside your practice area and become expert in a new field. When he began the process, Hans was corporate counsel for a multi-billion dollar insurance company. Yet, he took the initiative to apply his legal knowledge and advocacy skills to help conduct fair elections. It is uncommon that you would find someone with such drive and initiative to engage in preserving the election process at great cost to their personal financial success. Yet he did so then and does so now with passion, intelligence, integrity and consistency.

Senator, most of the time, individuals who are nominated to these positions have been selected because of their past affiliation with and loyalty to a particular party through service to the national party organization. And when such individuals are nominated they bring their experience at the national level but are often unfamiliar with what really happens at the state and local level. Hans von Spakovsky “cut his teeth” at the local level and has “risen through the ranks” rather than starting from a position of privilege. We need him on the FEC to ensure that when the FEC promulgates regulations, someone will ask what effect it will have at the state and local level. His would be a voice of reason on the FEC.

Senator, I heartily recommend Commissioner Hans von Spakovsky to you and the Senate Rules Committee for favorable consideration and forwarding to the full Senate for confirmation as Commissioner with the United States Federal Election Commission. He will serve the Commission and the citizens of the Untied States with keen intellect, impeccable integrity, and great initiative.

With great respect, I am,

Very truly yours,

Dear Senators Feinstein and Bennett:

I write today to strongly endorse Commissioner Hans A. von Spakovsky for a full term on the Federal Election Commission (FEC).

I have known Commissioner von Spakovsky for three years now and have come to admire his diligence, intellect, and commitment to public service.

My recent work as a former commissioner and vice chairman of the U.S. Election Assistance Commission (EAC) required that I work closely with the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) on matters pertaining to implementation of the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA) and the National Voter Registration Act of 1993 (NVRA). It was during this period that I came to know Commissioner von Spakovsky, as he was serving as Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for Civil Rights at DOJ and as a member of the EAC Board of Advisors. Although he and I occasionally had clear – and at times, significant – differences of opinion regarding interpretation of both HAVA and NVRA, I came away from such deliberations convinced that Commissioner von Spakovsky and I share a common sense of purpose and commitment to fulfilling our professional responsibilities.

I am aware that Commissioner von Spakovsky has come under particularly close scrutiny by some who have questioned whether he appropriately separates partisan considerations from sound public policy. While I will not attempt to rebut such concerns, I can speak with confidence as to my own personal and professional experiences in dealing with Commissioner von Spakovsky. In short, in the many instances in which I dealt with Commissioner von Spakovsky during my tenure on the EAC, I found him to be fully informed, extremely knowledgeable of pertinent Federal law and appropriately objective in his analysis and decision-making. Moreover, during this time, I was always impressed with the effort Commissioner von Spakovsky made to actively seek my opinion on a wide array of policy matters, despite the well-known fact that our political views differed significantly on a number of “hot button” issues confronting the field of election administration. I found Commissioner von Spakovsky to be deliberative in his decision-making, loyal to his long-held views of jurisprudence and legal theory and yet, willing to listen – and be persuaded – by compelling opposing views.

I am proud to say that throughout the past three years, my personal friendship with Commissioner von Spakovsky has strengthened, while our professional relationship has grown in mutual admiration. Without any hesitation, I recommend his appointment to a full term on the FEC.

Please feel free to call me if I can provide any further assistance on this matter.

Respectfully,

RAY MARTINEZ III
Former Commissioner, U.S. Election Assistance Commission
October 3, 2007

Dear Senator:

Four candidates for the Federal Election Commission (FEC) were recently reported out of committee without recommendation, which amounts to an unprecedented and significant vote of no confidence based on one particularly controversial nominee. We believe that each candidate should be considered individually, on his own merits. In particular, we believe that one of the nominees, Mr. Hans von Spakovsky, has failed to allay concerns that he will be able to administer the nation’s election laws fairly and without prejudice or undue partisan interest. We therefore urge you to oppose Mr. von Spakovsky’s appointment to the FEC.

In committee, substantial and justifiable concerns were raised with respect to Mr. von Spakovsky’s record of using federal government office to promote an agenda adverse to American voters. Documents that Mr. von Spakovsky has acknowledged drafting or signed as his own, as Counsel to the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Rights Division, demonstrate that he repeatedly advanced policies that closed poll site and courthouse doors to eligible American voters. For example, Mr. von Spakovsky claimed that states need not provide “fail-safe” provisional ballots to certain voters, despite a new federal law demanding “fail-safe” ballots to avert the demonstrated disenfranchisement that occurred in elections when no such ballots were available. He also enthusiastically promoted registration policies keeping new registrants off the voter rolls if their registration information did not “match” that in another government database, effectively disenfranchising voters in the event of a typographical error.

Though we find Mr. von Spakovsky’s preferred policies seriously misguided, ours is not merely a policy dispute. In addition to disturbing personnel-related allegations well-publicized by others, Mr. von Spakovsky has also been involved in decisions that have called into question his ability to collect and dispassionately analyze data relevant to government action affecting elections. For example, two months after the passage of a controversial photo identification law from his home state, which was subject to preclearance by his office, Mr. von Spakovsky published a highly unusual anonymous law review article extolling the virtues of photo identification requirements. In the preclearance process, only one day after career voting rights staff submitted a detailed 51-page factual analysis of the law and its likely
The Federal Election Commission is charged, inter alia, with enforcing the federal campaign finance laws, and in the course of these duties, Commissioners must gather and weigh detailed evidence concerning entities' compliance with these laws. They must be able to evaluate claims carefully and on their merits alone, in order to give the public confidence that election campaigns are conducted fairly and with integrity. We submit that given the controversy surrounding Mr. von Spakovsky's tenure at the Department of Justice, and his failure to alleviate that controversy in his responses to questions submitted in committee, serious questions remain concerning his ability to discharge his duties on the FEC with the unbiased care required. Our elections deserve better.

We therefore urge you to oppose Mr. von Spakovsky's appointment to the Federal Election Commission.

Dear Chairwoman Feinstein and Majority Leader Reid:

On behalf of several states and millions of disenfranchised voters across the United States, we respectfully ask that the Senate Rules Committee oppose the appointment of Hans von Spakovsky—who holds a recess appointment to the Federal Election Commission (FEC)—to serve a full term at the FEC.

By virtue of his actions in the Justice Department, Hans von Spakovsky had done irreparable damage to the course of democracy and voting rights all over the United States. This damage invalidates his ability to serve as an FEC Commissioner. Enclosed with this letter—compiled by six career attorneys at the Justice Department—is a detailed version of events in which Mr. von Spakovsky personally intervened inappropriately in voting rights matters at the Justice Department.

We implore the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to take a strong stand against the damage Hans von Spakovsky did to voting rights and electoral processes around the nation at the Justice Department, when he substituted his short term political judgment for professional, reasoned judgment of longtime attorneys who knew the law and the Constitution.

Please oppose Mr. von Spakovsky’s nomination to the FEC. If there is any place (besides the Justice Department) Mr. von Spakovsky should not serve, it is the Federal Election Commission.

Common Cause Letters

October 3, 2007

Dear Senator:

Common Cause urges you to reject an extraordinarily inappropriate nominee for a seat on the Federal Election Commission. Hans von Spakovsky, both in his current role as an FEC commissioner and in his former job at the Department of Justice, has demonstrated contempt for the rule of law and acted in an extreme partisan manner during his time in government.

We urge the Senate to reject efforts to "package" the four pending FEC nominations to avoid a separate vote on Mr. von Spakovsky. As Common Cause and other reform groups noted in an earlier letter, this would not only be unfair and undemocratic, but would conflict with a precedent established the last time the Senate considered a controversial FEC nominee.

Common Cause has worked for decades in support of a strong, independent enforcement agency for our nation's important campaign finance laws. We have been deeply disappointed in the efforts by both parties to appoint commissioners who were beholden to partisan interests rather than the public interest.

But Mr. von Spakovsky's nomination is especially disrespectful of the public interest. Mr. von Spakovsky's several years in government have been marked by activities that undermine the voting rights and campaign finance laws that are essential to our democratic system.

We urge the Senate to reject the nomination of Hans von Spakovsky to the Federal Election Commission.

Sincerely,

Dear Senator,

On behalf of the Lawyers’ Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, I am writing to urge you to vote against Hans von Spakovsky when his nomination to the Federal Election Commission (FEC) is considered on the Senate floor. As a former political appointee in the Department of Justice’s Civil Rights Division, von Spakovsky was the architect of a plan to use the Department’s power to enforce our nation’s historic civil rights protections to further partisan goals. As the political arm of the Civil Rights Division recovers from this historic mismanagement with the departure of almost all the key players, von Spakovsky is the last man standing. Unlike his former colleagues who have left the Department in shame because they put politics ahead of Americans’ most fundamental rights, von Spakovsky is on the cusp of being confirmed to the powerful post of FEC commissioner, where he will once again have control over enforcing voting protections. During his stewardship of our most fundamental right—the right to vote—von Spakovsky has proved untrustworthy in handling that solemn duty. It is that track record that necessitates a vote against him, sending a clear message that our right to vote is more important than partisan squabbling; it is the foundation of our democratic structure.

Mr. von Spakovsky was not just a participant in the program to politicize civil rights enforcement. He orchestrated the role the Department’s Voting Section played in that process. During his tenure with the Department of Justice, von Spakovsky was part of a conscious effort to purge the section of the talent and dedication of long time civil servants; punished career staff when they recommended a course of action that diverted from the political goals of the Department’s political appointees; politicized substantive law enforcement decisions; and shifted the priorities of the section away from protecting the participatory rights of America’s voters. His actions while at the Department raise serious questions about his professionalism and commitment to serve his country before his party.

During his time overseeing the Voting Section, enforcement of federal civil rights protections took a back seat to politics as the priorities of the section shifted to combating unfounded claims of voter fraud. As a result, the Department overruled decades of precedent by using the Department’s authority pursuant to Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act to approve discriminatory legislation, such as the Georgia photo identification requirement, over the near unanimous objection of career staff. Mr. von Spakovsky’s Voting Section turned the purpose of the statute the section enforces on its head by using it to remove voters from the process instead of ensuring all eligible voters may vote. This agenda appears to have a direct relationship with the prominent role voter fraud played in the developing story concerning the firing of at least eight United States Attorneys. In both the Civil Rights Division and United States Attorney program federal resources were committed to chasing the phantoms of election fraud. At the Voting Section, that program was coordinated by von Spakovsky.

The Lawyers’ Committee is a non-partisan, not for profit legal organization formed at the direction of President John F. Kennedy to involve the private bar in the protection of civil rights. We pair the nation’s largest pro bono network with expert staff to remedy civil rights violations across a broad spectrum of issues. Our cornerstone has been protecting the right to vote. For over four decades, the Lawyers’ Committee has worked with the best and brightest to ensure all eligible voters can cast a ballot. To that end, we are fortunate to have Joe Rich, a former chief of the Voting Section, Bob Kengle, a former deputy chief at the Voting Section, and Jon Greenbaum, a former senior trial attorney at the Voting Section guiding our work on voting rights. Together they have nearly 70 years of experience in the Civil Rights Division. Each worked with von Spakovsky. As they have made clear, together with a number of their former career colleagues at DOJ, in two letters sent to the Senate Rules Committee, von Spakovsky frustrated the enforcement of the critical civil rights statutes that have protected Americans for a generation. The letters are available at http://ncffe.org/page/-/Letter1.pdf and http://ncffe.org/page/-/Letter2.pdf. The first hand exposure of these former DOJ officials to von Spakovsky’s priorities and management style has led to our strong opposition to his nomination.

The dedicated civil servants who authored the letters devoted their careers to ensuring all eligible Americans have an equal opportunity to cast a meaningful ballot. As the letters discuss, their noble pursuit was frustrated by von Spakovsky’s control over the enforcement of voting rights protections. Hans von Spakovsky should be held responsible for his role in the corruption of justice. He should not be rewarded with a high profile position on the FEC.

The Honorable Harry Reid
Senate Majority Leader
S-221, The Capitol
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senate Majority Leader Reid,

Our groups strongly urge you to take the steps necessary to ensure that separate votes are held in the Senate on the nominations of Robert Lenhard, David Mason, Hans von Spakovsky and Steven Walther to serve as Commissioners on the Federal Election Commission.

The organizations include the Campaign Legal Center, Common Cause, Democracy 21, the League of Women Voters, Public Citizen and U.S. PIRG.

The FEC is an ineffective enforcement agency that lacks public credibility. Citizens are entitled to know where their Senators stand on the confirmation to the FEC of each of the nominees to the Commission, whose responsibilities include overseeing the campaign finance activities of Senators and their campaign opponents.

As you know, the pending FEC appointments include a controversial nomination. It appears that efforts are being made to bypass the normal process used to confirm Presidential appointments in order to ensure this controversial nominee’s confirmation by packaging him with the other FEC nominees to have just one vote on all four of the nominees together, thereby evading a specific vote on the controversial nominee.

This would not only be unfair and undemocratic, but also would be in direct conflict with the precedent established the last time the Senate considered a controversial nominee to the FEC.

In 2000, then-Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott (R-MS) provided for a separate vote in the Senate for a controversial FEC nominee. That nominee was confirmed by a vote of 64 to 35.

As far as we can see, the only reason for forcing the Senate to take a single bloc vote on the four pending FEC nominees appears to be to prevent a majority of the Senators from voting to reject one of the nominees. This is an unjustifiable and indefensible basis for denying regular order in the Senate and preventing individual votes on each of the four FEC nominees.
We strongly urge you to prevent a manipulative, undemocratic and unfair process from being used to confirm a nominee who otherwise might be rejected if regular order prevailed and separate votes took place on each of the FEC nominees.

We strongly urge you to ensure that separate votes occur in the Senate on each of the four nominees to serve on the FEC.

The Honorable Harry Reid

Dear Senator Reid,

On behalf of the Campaign Legal Center I am writing to strongly urge you to hold a separate vote in the Senate on the nomination of Hans von Spakovsky to the Federal Election Commission. This has happened previously with controversial nominees to the FEC, and seems particularly appropriate here given the compilation of misdeeds by this nominee that has been presented to the Senate.

Mr. von Spakovsky’s lengthy record of minority vote suppression has been well documented and leaves him singularly unqualified to serve in a position interpreting and enforcing our nation’s election laws. His nomination was condemned not only by a number of retired career-Justice Department prosecutors who worked with the nominee, but also by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, which represents hundreds of civil and human rights organizations and unions - including the NAACP, the National Council of La Raza, the ACLU, AARP, the National Organization for Women, the NEA, the United Mineworkers, and the Teamsters. The Conference has never weighed in before on an FEC nomination, normally advocating for or against U.S. Supreme Court nominees, but its membership was so offended by Mr. von Spakovsky’s record that they have urged the rejection of his nomination.

The nomination of Mr. von Spakovsky deserves an individual vote on the floor of the Senate. Constituents nationwide are entitled to know where their Senators stand on a nominee who is not just a party operative, but who has worked both in the private sector and while serving at the Justice Department to suppress minority voting by disenfranchising and intimidating potential voters, particularly those who are poor and elderly.

As noted above, there is precedent for having an individual vote on Mr. von Spakovsky. In 2000, the Rules Committee reported out two nominees to the Federal Election Commission: Mr. Danny McDonald and Mr. Bradley Smith. Mr. Smith’s record was of such concern that Senators insisted on an individual vote in the full Senate. While Mr. Smith was eventually confirmed, Senators who had bona fide concerns that Mr. Smith would not enforce the law were at least given the opportunity to vote on his nomination separately. The same thing should happen with regard to Mr. von Spakovsky’s nomination.

The Campaign Legal Center strongly urges you to conduct a separate vote in the full Senate on the nomination of Hans von Spakovsky. Voters nationwide deserve to know if their Senator votes in favor of this nominee who is wholly unqualified, having devoted much of his professional career to undermining minority voting rights.

regarding

"Evidence of the impact of voter ID requirements, and the prospects of US DOJ preclearance"

March 10, 2009
Good morning.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. My name is Toby Moore and I am a project director in elections research with the Research Triangle Institute (RTI International), a non-profit, non-partisan research organization headquartered in North Carolina. Before joining RTI in 2007, I was project manager for the Carter-Baker Commission on election reform at American University, and from 2000 to 2006 I served as the geographer of the voting section of the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice. My Ph.D. is from the University of Iowa in political geography.

I am currently directing the U.S. Election Assistance Commission’s 2008 Election Day Survey, and in that capacity have had the pleasure to work with Ann McGeehan, Kim Thole and the very fine staff in the Elections Division of your Secretary of State’s office. I first became involved in voter ID research in 2005, as part of the team of analysts and attorneys that conducted the review of the 2005 Georgia ID law for the Department of Justice. At American University in 2006, I designed and implemented a survey research project on voter ID, in conjunction with NuStats, a survey firm based in here in Austin.

Voter ID has obviously become a very partisan issue, and an emotional one, and the research community has struggled to inform the policy debate without becoming embroiled in it. My testimony today offers three perspectives I hope the Senate will find useful. First, I provide an objective survey of the current research in the field as I can. Second, based on my experience working on Section 5 preclearance cases at the Department of Justice, I discuss the substantial challenges the state faces in trying to meet its burden under the Voting Rights Act. Finally, and briefly, I describe the voter ID proposal made by the Carter-Baker Commission

Effects of voter ID legislation

I will focus today on voter ID and leave the discussion of voter impersonation fraud for other witnesses. However, it is my view that allegations of voter impersonation have almost uniformly failed to hold up under scrutiny, and as a threat to the overall health of the election system, it is negligible compared to other vulnerabilities, such as absentee ballot fraud or technology failures or hacking.

We should know more about the effects of voter ID than we do. In many respects, the research community has failed policy makers by not producing better data. The research community does appear to be catching up, and notable and reliable research is becoming available.

To begin, it is clear from public opinion polls that most Americans support requiring a photo ID in order to vote. Numerous public opinion surveys have established this. Opponents argue that poll taxes and literacy tests once enjoyed broad support as well, but the fact remains that ID requirements are popular.
Research on potential and actual effects of voter ID laws is diverse and often contradictory, and like much of election research, too often influenced by partisan and ideological motives. There have been three basic approaches attempted:

1. The first approach has been to match records in voter registration databases with records from motor vehicle agencies. This has been almost wholly unsuccessful in telling us how many lack the necessary IDs. I would point to two studies out of Georgia, one by University of Georgia political scientists Hood and Bullock and the other by the state itself. Both studies found that elderly and minority voters are more likely to lack ID. There is no reason to suspect that bad records or database matching problems would cause this evidence of disparate impact.

2. The second approach has been to use sophisticated statistical modeling to try to detect changes in turnout caused by new ID laws. The results of these studies have found everything from slight increases in turnout, to no change in turnout, to slight decreases in turnout among minority voters. I would suggest reading a forthcoming paper from Lorraine Minnite and Robert Erickson that assesses these attempts at modeling turnout changes; they conclude that our tools and data are inadequate for detecting an impact.

Blunter attempts that cite aggregate increases in turnout statewide over one or two elections are rhetoric, not analysis. In Indiana and Georgia in 2008, both battleground states in which the Obama campaign invested heavily, the close nature of the race and the decision by Democrats to spend campaign funds obviously dictated the greater turnout.

I confess that I find this line of research to be of little use for a conceptual reason. Voter ID laws are designed explicitly to reduce turnout: to prevent fraudulent voters from casting ballots. If turnout increases or stays the same, what use is the law? If it were true that voter ID laws boosted turnout, could that increase not swamp the disenfranchisement of minority voters?

3. Finally, and I think most fruitfully, we now have a series of survey projects that have provided valuable information, despite the difficulties in reaching the targeted population. The Brennan Center found in 2006 in a nationwide survey that 7% of voting-age Americans lack ready access to proof of citizenship papers, and as many as 11% lack government issued photo ID. The survey found African-Americans, the poor and the elderly were more likely to lack such documentation. The survey I initiated at the Center for Democracy and Election Management at American University, which surveyed registered voters in three states, estimated that 1.2% of voters lacked IDs. Like the Brennan Center, the AU survey found a disparate impact:

1 Some defenders of voter ID laws argue that ID laws increase turnout by boosting confidence in the electoral system. We have no evidence of this, but even if it were true, could that increase mask the disenfranchisement of other voters? In any case, it makes interpreting changes in turnout, to my mind, impossible.

2 A second set of surveys has focused on exit polling of voters. Particularly important is the work by Barreto, Nuno and Sanchez, three professors who analyzed the results of exit polls in New Mexico, California and Washington. They found that 88% of voters said they had a valid driver’s license, while African-Americans, Latinos and Asian-Americans lacked ID at a higher rate than whites. Voters in these groups were less likely to have other forms of ID as well.
• African-Americans were more than four times more likely than whites to lack photo ID;
• women made up nearly all of those who did have photo ID;
• nearly all of those who lacked ID were Democrats;
• 88% of those without photo ID had household incomes below $25,000 a year.

The finding that women are so much more likely to lack photo ID is worth elaboration. On top of the problem with lacking photo, women also will face problems because their names are more likely to change through marriage or divorce. A significant number of women voters will come to the polls with IDs that do not match their names on the registration rolls, and they will be at a serious risk of losing their vote.

Applying the 1.2% rate to Texas provides a rough floor for estimating the number of Texas voters who lack ID. Since the AU survey included Indiana, where an ID law was already in effect, it is almost certain that Texas’s rate is higher. Even at this low percentage, though, approximately 162,901 registered voters in the 2008 election would have lacked a government issued photo ID. Again, this is a minimum number and almost surely underestimates the population.

While our estimates of how many people lack government-issued photo ID are still rough, there is now a solid body of evidence that a small but significant percentage of eligible voters do lack ID, and those people are more likely to be poor, minority, or elderly. There is some evidence that Democrats are more effected than Republicans. While our understanding of voter ID ownership is not totally clear, it is more substantial than any evidence of significant fraud from non-citizen voting or voter impersonation. For this reason, the research suggests that policy makers should tread cautiously.

We know even less about how many voters lack the secondary, non-photo forms of ID allowed in the bill. The problem here is that if, as the evidence suggests, photo ID discriminates against specific groups, including minorities, than they are still facing an additional hurdle than other voters in the requirement to produce multiple ID. This may be problematic under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act.

The prospects for preclearance under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act

As we all know, any change to elections laws in Texas must be “precleared” by the U.S. Department of Justice under the Voting Rights Act. The state should not take comfort in the Supreme Court’s upholding of the Indiana voter ID law. As the Bush Administration argued when federal courts blocked a 2005 Georgia ID law that it had precleared, the Section 5 analysis is distinct from the constitutional analysis. The Section 5 review will be a comparison of the current Texas law to the proposed law, and the state will be required to prove that its proposed law does not deny or abridge the right to vote on account of race, color or membership in a language minority group.

Given the new Administration and its statements on voting rights enforcement, and on the lack of reliable data, I think it is safe to assume that Texas faces a significant challenge in meeting its burden of proof under the Voting Rights Act. Not knowing the effect of the law on protected groups, including language minority groups and African-Americans and Hispanics, will be an invitation to the Department of Justice to object to the change on the basis of the state not meeting its statutory burden.

Specifically, based on my experience in the Georgia case and other Section 5 cases, I expect DOJ at a minimum will look for:

- Evidence that Texas knows the number and demographic make-up of eligible voters and registered voters who lack the required ID, and that population is not skewed toward minority voters protected by the VRA;
- Well-developed and well-funded public education programs to make voters aware of the new requirements, initiated well before the implementation of the new law;
- Revamped poll worker training to emphasize the correct enforcement of the new, more complicated ID requirements;
- Well-developed and well-funded programs to distribute the required IDs, free of charge, to those who do not have them;
- Substantial evidence of the voter impersonation problem that the law addresses;
- And finally, a detailed discussion of why less retrogressive alternatives, including use of an affidavit fail-safe, were not adopted.

Texas faces a substantial cost on two fronts: first, to develop and fund the necessary supporting programs to fairly implement the law; and second, to develop a convincing submission to what I expect to be a skeptical Civil Rights Division.

The cost of implementing a legal photo voter ID law, based on the Indiana and Georgia experiences, will be significant. Indiana estimated that providing free ID cards would cost the state more than $700,000 annually in lost revenue and additional expenses. When Georgia finally offered free ID after federal courts blocked earlier laws, the Secretary of State told the Georgia League of Women Voters that it estimated that equipment costs alone would total nearly $1 million. In addition, states taking on new photo voter ID laws or their local governments face increased costs for poll worker training and public education; Georgia planned on spending more than $500,000 annually to educate voters about their new vote law. Finally, the legal and administrative costs to submit the law to the Justice Department under the Voting Rights Act and to defend it in court can easily reach into the millions of dollars.

Carter-Baker Commission

The Commission on Federal Election Reform, chaired by former President Jimmy Carter and former Secretary of State Jimmy Baker, included a recommendation for voter ID among the 87 recommendations for improving U.S. elections. These recommendations were targeted at a crisis in confidence in American elections created not by the threat of fraud but by administrative and technological failures, and the partisan control of elections in this country. The voter ID recommendation was not a blanket endorsement of voter ID laws; in fact, Carter and Baker strongly condemned the 2005 Georgia law that is a close model for the present Texas bill. There were other significant differences:

- The Commission based its recommendation on the availability of national REAL ID cards;
- The recommendation is a compromise that called for a much greater role for the government in registering voters and providing them with the required ID;
- It called for a phased-in implementation, which the Texas bill does not include;
- The Commission also envisioned a national standard, and explicitly condemned the patchwork nature of today’s ID laws.

Conclusions

In public debate, unfortunately, there is a tendency to treat all ID laws as the same. In fact, there are many ways to reasonable ensure the identity of voters without disenfranchising those without ID or placing unnecessary barriers to the voting booth. The use of affidavits, in particular, creates a paper trail that allows for enforcement and analysis. A state could run its elections under this sort of law for an election or two, then survey those voters who vote via the affidavit. This is the pool of voters who would be effected by an absolute photo ID requirement. If the survey finds evidence of fraud, if the affidavit voters were not citizens or voted on bad voter registrations, the law can be tightened. If not, the data from the affidavits should reassure the public of the integrity of the voting system. Nobody would lose their right to vote because they lack an ID, yet it would create a paper trail for detecting fraud and the impact of ID laws that we have so far lacked.

The state should take seriously its obligation to carefully implement any ID law. IDs should be provided for free. The state should take an affirmative role in educating voters, poll workers and election officials on the requirements. Without an investment in state resources, enforcement in the polling place will be uneven.

Finally, we should all be reminded that America has both a long history of attempts to manipulate electoral outcomes, and a long history of using fraud as a pretext for laws favoring one party or group over another. I don't mean this as an indictment of current attempts to implement voter ID laws, but as a plea from a scholar of the American South for both sides to be sensitive to the way America’s sometimes sad history of restricting the franchise informs the current suspicion in some quarters that voter ID requirements are intended to disenfranchise.

Thank you for the opportunity to testify today and I would be happy to answer any questions.
According to the DPS Website, there are no places to obtain a Identity Card within Loop 610 in Harris County. This is probably the greatest minority concentration in the state.
TESTIMONY OF FRANK B. STRICKLAND
TEXAS STATE SENATE
March 10, 2009

Senator Duncan, members of the Senate, my name is Frank Strickland. I am a partner in the law firm of Strickland Brockington Lewis LLP in Atlanta, Georgia, a firm which together with its predecessors, dates back to 1971. My experience with elections comes primarily from two sources: serving as a member of the election board for the largest county in Georgia and litigating various election and other political cases over a period of many years.

Although I am not here in an official capacity, I am one of five members of the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections (the “Election Board”), a bipartisan board appointed by the Board of Commissioners of Fulton County, which has general supervision of all voter registration and election processes in Georgia’s largest county. I previously served on the Election Board from 1971 to 1977. Substantially all of the City of Atlanta is located in Fulton County. The Election Board is independent in that it does not report to the Board of Commissioners, and its decisions on registration and election matters in Fulton County, including the appointment of the department director, are final.

Fulton County is Georgia’s largest county with a population of approximately 850,000. There are 552,559 registered voters in Fulton County.

In 2005 Georgia first adopted a law requiring a form of photo identification when voting. A substantial number of persons over age 18 already had a Georgia driver’s license, which was one of the acceptable forms of identification. The 2005 statute provided for issuance of a state photo ID card for a nominal fee to persons who did not have a driver’s license or another acceptable form of photo ID such as a government employment ID card, voter ID card, U.S. military ID card, tribal ID card or United States passport. As a result of federal court litigation before U.S. District Judge Harold L. Murphy in Rome, Georgia, the law was changed in 2006 to provide for the issuance of a free photo ID card at any registrar’s office in one of Georgia’s 159 counties.

Notwithstanding the availability of a free photo ID to anyone who did not have another acceptable form of identification, the 2006 statute was also litigated before Judge Murphy in a case entitled Common Cause v. Billups. In ruling for the State of Georgia, Judge Murphy, a Carter appointee to the bench, recognized the state’s interest in passing a photo identification law to prevent fraud:

"Additionally, Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that the Photo ID requirement is not reasonably related to the State's interest in preventing fraud in voting."

Other plaintiffs filed suit in state courts to challenge the photo ID statute under state law. These efforts were also unsuccessful after appeals to the Supreme Court of Georgia.

In addition to arguing that in-person voter fraud does not occur and remedies like voter identification laws are unnecessary, opponents of photo identification requirements have long argued – quite vocally and emphatically – that these laws would lead to the disenfranchisement of, in Georgia’s case, hundreds-of-thousands of voters.

But, when the State of Georgia finally had its day in court, it became clear that the emotional and hyperbolic arguments used to argue against the state’s photo identification law was simply empty rhetoric.

Judge Murphy also addressed this argument in his decision for the state:
As the Rokit court noted, voters who lack Photo ID undoubtedly exist somewhere, but the fact that Plaintiffs, in spite of their efforts, have failed to uncover anyone “who can attest to the fact that he/she will be prevented from voting” provides significant support for a conclusion that the Photo ID requirement does not unduly burden the right to vote."

Judge Murphy further stated "Plaintiffs have failed to produce any evidence of any individual ... who would undergo any appreciable hardship to obtain photo identification in order to be qualified to vote."

The plaintiffs’ inability to produce a single voter who would be adversely impacted by the law was important to Judge’s Murphy’s determination that there was no significant burden posed by the photo ID law and should also be a very important consideration for the Texas State Senate. Of the two individual plaintiffs named in the Common Cause case, one individual testified that she did not mind getting a photo identification and did not think it would be hard to get one. The other Plaintiff said that he thought he could get a photo ID and that it would probably “help a lot.” Interestingly, the same lawyers who argued that Plaintiff simply could not find a way to travel seven miles to his registrar’s office to get a photo ID also drove that Plaintiff nearly 200 miles to testify at trial – past many locations where he could have obtained a free photo ID.

Likewise, the other witnesses relied upon by the lawyers for the Plaintiff to establish that obtaining a photo ID was too burdensome ultimately agreed that, in fact, they were perfectly capable of obtaining the ID. One woman who signed an affidavit prepared by the Plaintiffs' counsel asserting that it was too far to go to the county courthouse and get a photo ID from the registrar, freely admitted on her deposition that she regularly traveled to the courthouse and could pick up an ID the next time she was there. Another witness who also gave an affidavit that he would have a hard time obtaining a photo ID testified differently on deposition. When asked if he thought he could get a ride to the registrar’s office to get a photo ID, he replied that he didn’t need a ride and could go get one anytime – because the registrar’s office was within walking distance of his home.

Judge Murphy’s decision in the Common Cause case was upheld on January 14, 2009, in a unanimous opinion of a three judge panel of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. The court stated:

“We conclude, based on the decision in Crawford v. Marion County Election Board, 128 S.Ct. 1610 (2008), which upheld a similar law in Indiana, that the burden imposed by the requirement of photo identification is outweighed by the interests of Georgia in safeguarding the right to vote.”

Plaintiffs intend to petition for certiorari. However, because the Crawford case really is on all fours with the Georgia’s case – except Georgia’s law was deemed less strict by Justice Kennedy – a grant of that petition for cert is unlikely.

After Judge Murphy’s September 2007 decision upholding the photo ID law, Georgia held numerous elections during 2007 and 2008. In November 2007, more than 100 Georgia counties and municipalities held elections with the photo identification law in place. Every one of those elections occurred without incident or legal challenge related to the photo ID requirement. In July 2008, partisan primaries were held with a large turnout. Again, no problems related to photo ID.
Most importantly, in the 2008 General Election – with the highest turnout ever seen in Georgia (>3.9 million) – the photo ID law posed no problem. That fact is particularly important because of the 3.9 million votes cast, 92 percent were cast in person, meaning that the voter had to show a proper form of photo ID. Again, no problems. Although the turnout was much lighter for the December 2 runoff, the fact remained constant that the photo ID requirement did not result in any disenfranchisement statewide.

From the perspective of an elections administration official in Fulton County, I can also say without hesitation that county-wide, the photo ID requirement did not result in the mass disenfranchisement its opponents predicted. The requirement did not result in any disenfranchisement at all. Focusing on the general election in November 2008, the voter turnout was 405,628 out of 552,559 registered voters, a turnout of approximately 73 percent, a record for Fulton County both in terms of the number of registered voters and voter turnout. Only 93 voters did not have an acceptable form of photo ID. Each such voter was given a provisional ballot and in accordance with the statute was instructed to present a valid photo ID within 48 hours. While only one did so, there is no way to know why the others did not. Maybe the voter was an imposter. Maybe in the age of instant information, the voter knew the result and also knew that returning to have one more vote counted would not make a difference. We don't know the answer to why people did not return but we do know this: not one person filed a complaint regarding the photo ID requirement.

We also know that the overwhelming majority of people had and showed their photo IDs. Why was that? Well, even before the adoption of the current photo ID law in 2006, many if not all polling places in Fulton County routinely asked voters to identify themselves, most often by asking to see the voter’s driver’s license. That has been the case in my polling places for at least 30 years, so the actual requirement for presentation of a form of photo ID was likely a non-event in hundreds of polling places.

However, a great deal of credit must also go to the Georgia Secretary of State Karen Handel, her staff, the members of the State Election Board and county election officials who worked tirelessly to educate Georgia voters about several things: First, you need one of six forms of photo ID to vote in person. Second, if you don’t have one of those forms of photo ID, here’s how you get one – free. Third, if you prefer not to get a photo ID, you can always vote an absentee ballot by mail – without excuse and without a photo ID. Fourth and finally, for those people who showed up without a photo ID, voted a provisional ballot and never returned, a letter was sent to remind them again about the availability of the photo ID. I’d urge the Texas legislature to provide for a similar educational program for the benefit of voters.

From time to time, the argument has been made that no matter how much election officials and poll workers are educated on the topic, the requirement will be administered in a racially discriminatory fashion. That argument is a red herring and frankly, nonsense. An examination of the people running elections in Fulton County is illuminating. The Election Board appoints a full time director of the election department, who for several years has been an African American woman. Approximately 95 percent of the full time election department staff is African American. In primary and general elections more than half of the paid poll workers in the 356 precincts in Fulton County are African American. While critics of the photo ID law contend that it will be administered in a racially discriminatory fashion, there is absolutely no support for that allegation, just as there is no support for the notion that requiring a photo ID is unconstitutionally burdensome.

The Georgia experience is useful for any number of reasons but I'll leave you with three:

1. Although the charge was made that “hundreds of thousands” of voters would be disenfranchised, in the end – when put to the proof and cross examination – the Plaintiffs could not show that even one person was unable to obtain a photo ID if he or she so desired.

2. The educational program is a must for any photo ID law – in addition to making sure that people know the requirements for voting, the educational pieces are also an opportunity for election officials to remind voters to vote.

3. The debate over photo ID has been hijacked by politics. However, if one were to peel back the onion, the issue is this: Should you have to prove who you are when you vote? Who can really argue with the answer to that?

The Myth of Voter Impersonation Fraud at the Polls

March 10, 2009
On behalf of the Brennan Center for Justice at NYU School of Law, I want to thank you for the opportunity to speak with you today.

My name is Adam Skaggs, and I am counsel at the Brennan Center. The Brennan Center is a non-partisan public policy and legal advocacy organization that focuses on fundamental issues of democracy and justice. Among other things, we seek to promote policies that ensure fair and accurate elections and that maximize citizen enfranchisement and participation in the electoral process. The Brennan Center works to remove barriers to voting while ensuring that the integrity of our elections is protected, because we believe electoral integrity is advanced when all eligible citizens are able to participate in elections. Our work toward these goals has included extensive research and the publication of studies and reports; assistance to state and federal policy makers and advice on electoral legislation; and — when it has been necessary — litigation to protect the fundamental right to vote.

As part of this work, we have paid particular attention to the debate over strict voter identification policies. We have commissioned research on the number of citizens who lack certain forms of documentary proof of identity and we have participated as amicus in litigation over strict voter identification policies in Indiana, Georgia, Arizona and Albuquerque, New Mexico. A central facet of these efforts has been our research on allegations of voter fraud. We have analyzed claims of rampant voter fraud in order to distinguish unfounded and exaggerated tales of fraud from reliable, verified claims of election misconduct. We published the results of our analysis in a monograph entitled "The Truth About Voter Fraud," which compiles the methodological flaws that lead to allegations of voter fraud, and debunks baseless — though often repeated — reports of voter fraud. In my testimony here today, I will share some of our findings.

Our findings illustrate that S.B. 362 makes little sense as a matter of policy, for three reasons. First, it does not fix any notable problem that Texans have had. Second, to bolster their case, supporters highlight problems that S.B. 362 would not correct, which misleads the public into thinking that S.B. 362 will accomplish more than it ever could. Lastly, and perhaps most important, S.B. 362 is likely to create problems far worse than the one it could possibly address. I will focus my testimony today on the first two issues, and leave to my colleagues addressing the third point — whether the proposed solution actually creates problems that are worse than the one S.B. 362 is designed to address.

Because we have found virtually no fraud of the type that an ID requirement could fix, the Brennan Center is often charged with denying the existence of election irregularities. This is not accurate, and I would like to state this with absolute clarity: unfortunately, some forms of election misconduct and fraud do occur with some frequency.

Last year, as in the past, there were repeated instances of voter misinformation and intimidation — such as when voters in particular communities were informed that they would be arrested if they had unpaid parking tickets, or voters were given inaccurate information about where their polling places were located. There have been repeated instances in which election officials have denied registration to individuals without legal justification; we saw this problem with college students in multiple communities last fall.
Occasionally, individuals offer to sell their votes, or vote where they do not actually reside. And there have been confirmed examples of fraudulent activity involving absentee ballots. Some of these incidents involve absentee voters being coerced or bribed; others involve schemes to submit multiple fraudulent absentee ballots.

All these acts should be condemned. Where it does exist, election misconduct should be, investigated and punished. And it often is.

Finally, some reports of voter fraud result from mistakes by individuals who register or vote without realizing they are not eligible. For example, in Arizona, individuals in the process of becoming naturalized citizens registered after they received letters from immigration authorities telling them that their "application for citizenship ha[d] been approved" — but before they’d formally taken the oath of citizenship. In Wisconsin, we saw a citizen show up to vote and present his prisoner ID card — prominently stamped with the word “offender.” Unfortunately, the poll worker in Wisconsin let this individual cast a ballot in spite of his conviction status. But these are examples of human error; these individuals were not trying to misrepresent their status, and they were not trying to commit fraud.

No one is arguing that ineligible individuals should be permitted to vote, but publicizing eligibility requirements and training poll workers is a more effective answer to preventing non-citizens or felons from voting than requiring identification from every legitimate voter.

As to allegations of other types of voter fraud, our research indicates that these claims often prove baseless upon inspection: except in the rarest of cases, those who are screaming about fraud are crying wolf. This is true of the most frequently reported forms of putative voter fraud — including double voting, voting in the name of dead people, and — most importantly for the purposes of this hearing — individuals impersonating registered voters at the polls. The Brennan Center's exhaustive research revealed that there is little to no reliable evidence of in-person impersonation fraud, in Texas, or elsewhere in the country. And, of course, this form of fraud is the only misconduct that a voter identification requirement will address.

This is worth repeating: the only problem that a voter ID requirement could possibly fix usually doesn’t exist. Texans are struck and killed by lightning more often. And there are far, far more reports of UFOs every year than instances of impersonation at the polls.

There are several reasons why reports of fraud at the polling place crumble when they’re subjected to real scrutiny.

First, many claims of impersonation fraud are based on record matching processes that are inherently flawed. Using data matching in order to identify suspected cases of voter fraud involves the comparison of computerized lists of voters with other computerized lists. For example, voter lists may be matched with lists of deceased individuals. Unfortunately, this data matching is often unreliable.
For example, a father may be confused with a son of the same name; without controlling for suffixes like “Jr.,” “John Smith, Jr.” may be misidentified as the same voter as “John Smith, Sr.” These problems also occur when records are deemed to match if they share a middle initial, without requiring a full match of the middle name. And they occur when similar — but not identical — names are said to match.

A very highly publicized example of this problem occurred when the Atlanta Journal Constitution attempted to find voter fraud by matching a list of voters against Social Security death records. The article cited the example of a dead voter named Alan Jay Mandel, and said that someone had “definitely” impersonated Mr. Mandel and signed his name in the pollbooks. The alleged example of impersonation fraud was widely cited by numerous public officials, but it didn’t pan out: it turned out that the signature actually belonged to one Alan J. Mandell — with 2 “l”s — not the dead Mr. Mandel, with just one “l”. The actual voter — the one with 2 “l”s — was very much alive and well when he voted.

Second, many erroneous reports of impersonation fraud are attributed to clerical errors, such as a legitimate voter signing the pollbook on the line meant for a voter with a very similar name, or a pollworker scanning the wrong voter’s bar code at the end of the day. “The Truth About Voter Fraud” catalogues numerous examples of such clerical errors. As the report makes clear, after initial claims of polling place fraud are investigated thoroughly, they are very frequently revealed to be the result of understandable human error — not any attempt to defraud the election system.

Both of these problems turned up in the claims of impersonation fraud lobbed by the Texas Watchdog website in the weeks before the 2008 election. In a story headlined “Dead Voters Cast Ballots in Dallas County” — later changed to reflect reality — 48 specific votes were questioned. Poll books and signature rosters were available for 47 of those votes, and after a more careful review, the Dallas Morning News “concluded that none involved a fraudulently cast vote.”

To summarize, there are plenty of since-debunked reports of voter fraud — but virtually no confirmed examples of impersonation fraud. And, notably, this isn’t for lack of trying. It’s widely known that, under the previous administration, the U.S. Department of Justice prioritized investigation and prosecution of voter fraud. But in five years of effort, they did not prosecute a single case of impersonation fraud. The crimes the DOJ did prosecute — campaign finance violations, voter harassment, and vote buying, among others — would not be prevented by S.B. 362. Texas Attorney General Abbott similarly spent two years and $1.4 million dollars to fight voter fraud, yielding indictments for all sorts of things that identification rules would not prevent, but not a single case that S.B. 362 could fix. Moreover, the scarcity is not confined to indictments or prosecutions; in the past few years, with immense prosecutorial resources diverted to voter fraud, even allegations of impersonation at the polls have been strikingly rare.

There is an obvious reason why impersonation fraud — the only thing S.B. 362 would address — is such a rarity: the risk of getting caught is high, the penalties are extreme, and there is hardly any payoff. Under federal law, any voter impersonator faces up to five years in prison, and fines of $10,000.\textsuperscript{xii} Texas law allows up to \textit{ten} years in prison and a $10,000 fine.\textsuperscript{xiii} For a non-citizen, deportation is added to that calculus. And there is very little incremental value to a single vote: in the vast majority of elections or referenda, a single vote will not provide the margin of victory. So there is little incentive to risk the severe penalties for the crime. Anyone who truly is willing to risk the severe criminal sanctions for voter fraud would be much more likely to commit a crime with “more bang for the buck” than one single vote.

As Texas Republican campaign consultant Royal Masset put it, “in-person voter fraud is non-existent. It doesn’t happen, and . . . makes no sense because who’s going to take the risk of going to jail on something so blatant that maybe changes one vote?”\textsuperscript{xiv}

There is an additional reason why impersonation fraud is so rare in Texas: voters must \textit{already} prove their identity before voting.\textsuperscript{xy} They do so by signing their name in the pollbook, and swearing an oath before an election official. They also must show documentation – either a registration certificate, or one of a broad series of documents designed to accommodate the diversity of Texas’s population. S.B. 362 makes the existing law substantially more strict, without a reason for doing so – there is no indication that the existing law is failing in any way.

\textbf{A Strict Voter ID Policy Does Not Address the Real Threats of Voter Fraud}

This brings me to the last point that I would like to address briefly: whether the “solution” that S.B. 362 proposes actually fits the problem.

As I’ve explained, the problem that S.B. 362 potentially could address — impersonation fraud — has been thoroughly discredited as a national problem. And we’ve not seen any credible evidence that Texas bucks this trend significantly: impersonation fraud doesn’t occur in Texas any more than it occurs elsewhere, as the investigation by Attorney General Abbot proved. The few allegations that have emerged in the last several weeks regarding the City of Progresso don’t change this conclusion. There was one report of a woman in the City of Progresso who signed her own name under a different voter’s name, and then herself reported this mistake to election officials. And there have been allegations of Progresso voters being paid to vote for a specific slate of candidates. These examples simply do not establish that impersonation fraud is a prevalent problem; and, in any event, S.B. 362 would not stop fraud involving vote buying if the voters and voter-buyers were willing to risk the relevant punishment.

The other problems that have been reported, in Progresso and elsewhere, involved issues that wouldn’t even remotely be addressed by voter ID. These include ineligible non-citizens voting; voting by individuals who resided outside city limits; and, significantly, eligible citizens who were wrongly \textit{prevented} from voting. These issues have nothing to do with S.B. 362. But because there’s no evidence of impersonation fraud, backers of bills like S.B. 362 trumpet these other types of misconduct.

They’ve got no other choice to resort to this sleight of hand. S.B. 362 addresses a so-called problem that doesn’t exist in any real sense — and that isn’t likely to develop for
