The Ohio State University Moritz College of Law Justice for Children Project will present a two-day symposium on juvenile law on April 30-May 1, 2009. The symposium will focus on timely and cutting edge issues pertaining to delinquency, abuse, neglect, dependency, and termination of parental rights cases.

The symposium will look at reinventing juvenile law in light of developments in neurological and socioscientific research and the growing incorporation of these concepts in legislative acts and judicial decisions.

CLE credit will be requested.

A limited number of scholarships from the Office of the Ohio Public Defender will be available to public defenders and pro bono counsel.

For the most up-to-date information regarding the symposium, visit moritzlaw.osu.edu/jfc/symposia/. If you have additional questions, please contact Professor Kate Federle at federle.1@osu.edu.
